

International Army Proposed to Assembly Of League of Nations

Belgian Delegate Makes Proposal, Asserting That the Time for Disarmament Has Not Come.

CANADIAN SPOKESMAN

Delegate Rowell Warns Assembly That Neither Canada Nor the United States Will Tolerate Interference in Internal Affairs.

Geneva, November 20.—(By the Associated Press.)—An international military force, with an international staff, was proposed to the assembly of the league of nations today by Senator Henri La Fontaine, of the Belgian delegation.

Senator La Fontaine had somewhat started the assembly by declaring that the world was not ready for disarmament.

"It is necessary to say frankly to the people," he said, "that the time for disarmament has not yet come."

Before the world could disarm, added, "entirely different ideas than those that prevailed before the war must be discussed and applied."

He proposed that the armaments be comprised in an international force, with an international staff, ready to be used "in the cause of right," in such a case as arose from the present situation of Armenia.

For Revision of Covenant.

The first formal step looking toward the revision of the covenant of the league of nations was taken by the assembly of the league at today's session. The Dutch minister of foreign affairs, H. A. Van Karnebeek, introduced a resolution for reconsideration of Article 18, having to do with the registration of treaties.

The resolution provides that the reconsideration be conducted either by the assembly itself or by a committee to make the meaning of the article clearer.

Jonkheer Van Karnebeek first called attention to this article of the covenant at yesterday's session. He said there were several interpretations of the article, which, in brief, provides that treaties between nations shall not be binding until they are registered with the league, and proposed that it be studied carefully with a view to its clarification. (The text of Article 18 is as follows: "Every treaty or international engagement entered into hereafter by any member of the league shall, as far as possible, be registered with the secretariat and shall, as soon as possible, be published by it. No such treaty or international engagement shall be binding until so registered".)

Hope that "without too much delay," a way will be found for the entry of the United States into the league of nations is given by the declaration of President-elect Harding. It was declared in an address to the assembly of the league today by Tommaso Tittton, former foreign minister of Italy.

The league, added Signor Tittton, "will never be a league of nations until all the nations, without exception, are included in it."

Canadian Gives Warning.

Although the United States is not represented by a delegate in the assembly of the league of nations, there is hardly a session in which the United States is not referred to in some manner. The United States today had a volunteer spokesman, on the speaker's stand in Newton W. Rowell, of the Canadian delegation, who warned the assembly against any policy involving interference in the internal affairs of any country.

"Canada," said Mr. Rowell, "will

Some Facts about Zonite

By JOHN TAINTOR FOOTE

In this article Mr. Foote tells how thousands suffered, thousands died that a great medical discovery might be born. He tells how thousands will be saved in peaceful years to come by the greatest blessing of the war.

I HAVE been asked to tell the story of Zonite, not in a magazine article, as might be supposed, but in the form of paid advertisements in daily newspapers. I have agreed to do this because after talking with physicians, surgeons, editors, chemists and business men, I am certain that: first: this new antiseptic is the most important advance made by medical science since the discovery of anaesthetics. Second: that only through advertising can the people of this country learn of and obtain a tremendous blessing that was born in the horror and agony of war.

This blessing is a marvelous antiseptic which revolutionized war surgery and saved hundreds of thousands of lives in England and France. For the benefit of those who may not have heard of the new antiseptic, I quote extracts from articles on the subject in various magazines.

What magazines say:

From the Metropolitan Magazine: "The great difficulty was that every germicide which is strong enough to kill germs will also poison or injure the tissues . . . Finally the brilliant, young Franco-American surgeon, Dr. Carrel and his associate Dr. Dakin devised and perfected a germicide strong enough to kill germs but against which the cells of the body could protect themselves . . . thus saving the body from a disastrous defeat into a glorious victory."

From the Journal of the American Medical Association: "After experimenting with some two hundred antiseptic solutions of various kinds and strengths, Dakin at last succeeded in wedding to Harry M. Schraudenbach. These events bring us up to November of 1917. From now on the narrative moves with rapidity.

Shepard Tires Country.
During this time Fred Shepard, now a matured man, had been touring the country with his parents, often acting as chauffeur upon extensive visits to the multiple interests of his father in southern California, Michigan, Indiana, Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia and Florida.

During November of 1917 Mrs. Schraudenbach's husband had died of stomach trouble in Chicago and in November of 1919 she married W. L. Henry. In the meantime she had met Dr. Elmer in Jacksonville. The same month Dr. Elmer's wife died of stomach trouble in Jacksonville.

At a date which is unknown Mrs. Pauline Hopson, one of the two beautiful Florida sisters, obtained a divorce from her husband in Jacksonville. In the month of November, 1919, she met Fred Shepard in a Florida hotel. Claiming that at first sight, they were married in Abbeville on December 18 or 20, 1919.

The Shepard couple went to California shortly after their marriage and made their home there for some time, but, according to statements of friends, the wife was unhappy and wished to return to Georgia. At length this was arranged. Residents of Fort Valley aver that Mr. and Mrs. Shepard had a number of breaks, at which times she would go to Jacksonville.

Son is Wounded.

Mrs. Shepard was at her home, 1818 Ionia street, on May 17 subsequent to some such misunderstanding, where her mother is said to have been ill. That day her son, John S. Hopson, was staying at Abbeville and had come to the town to nurse the wounded boy. The following day Mr. Shepard also went to Abbeville. It is stated by friends that he was with all members of the immediate family present on this occasion.

On May 20 the Henrys and Shepard were at Perry. On the 22nd, later developments show Fred Shepard drew up the will which subsequently made its sensational appearance in Abbeville Journal of Perry, describing the drawing of the will, which was his duty. He stated to the Constitution correspondent Mr. Harrold, same day in his store, briefly informing him that he desired to have a will drawn "because I am going to California soon."

"Mr. Shepard was a man of few words, who didn't care, to have others know his business," he said. "He said he had a son, an old one with corrections made on the face. The principle change was striking out the annuity clause which provided $100 per month for his widow while she lived. This was changed to read for life." When I had copied the will with the Henrys, we did, Mr. and Mrs. Henry acting as witnesses. When I had signed it Mr. Harrold placed it in his coat pocket. I never again laid eyes upon that will until it was presented for probate recently."

Drastic Developments.

From this point in the development of the Shepard story, events progressed with a tragic and dramatic swiftness. On May 27 Fred Shepard appeared at the Henry home in Perry suffering from a stomach disorder, according to the statement of Mrs. Henry. That night he went to one of his farms and returned later suffering more worse through Saturday, when Dr. W. L. Orr of Perry, was called in. The next night he was in a condition for the worse. Monday the wealthy peach grower was at death's door, a cramped collapse having taken place. Dr. Borden of Fort Valley, was rushed to his bedside. Dr. Borden ordered the dying man to a bacon hospital immediately. Through the night he lay dying as he was speeded in a high-powered car accompanied by his nephews, Fred Crandall and Ernest Hopson, and Dr. Ernest L. Morrison, attorney appointed by Dr. Harrold and the end came the following morning, June 1, between 10 and 11 o'clock.

He died in the presence of his wife, who was ignorant of his husband's condition.

Enter Dr. Elmer.

Back in the days when Alfred Shepard, the millionaire, first came to Fort Valley to make his home, the old residents will tell you that he often spoke of his son, Frederick, who had left home as a boy. That was about twenty-two years ago. One day a friend in Oregon wired the father that his son was living there upon a ranch with his wife. Instantly the family went to find their boy. Upon the Oregon ranch he was found. A divorce was at length arranged and the reunited family once again turned their faces towards the peach blossoms of central Georgia.

Enter Dr. Elmer.

In the meantime, some eight or ten years ago, there was a certain Dr. F. Eugene Elmer residing in Mexico. Statements credited to him maintain that he is of noble English birth. Report has it that he had received the best of education in European universities. His parents are variously reported as English, Dutch and Spanish, and he is said to have been born in Peru.

About this time Dr. Elmer was forced to flee from Mexico on account of political trouble, as he states, and he came to Jacksonville, Fla. There, it is understood, he met a beautiful English girl, the daughter or widow of an English nobleman, and married her.

Elsewhere in Florida were two young girls, strikingly pretty brunettes, named Daugherty. One married a Mr. Hopson. The other was from Every-Week: "Some good things have come out of the great war—first among them is an antiseptic (Dakin's Solution) so powerful and yet safe that treatment of infection has been revolutionized."

The above quotations are from articles describing Dakin's Solution, the antiseptic devised by two distinguished surgeons of the Rockefeller Institute, New York City, which is conceded by French, British and American physicians to be the greatest medical discovery of the age.

No protection.

In the days preceding the war, the medical profession had only two kinds of antiseptics: powerful, highly poisonous compounds that could not be applied freely and without danger to the human body, and so-called mild antiseptics that were practically valueless. It is a fact which every physician knows that although malignant bacteria are the cause of almost all suffering and disease, we generally had nothing five years ago which would afford real protection against its ever present and most dangerous foes.

And then came the greatest of all wars, and the horrible infection produced by modern gunfire, set the world at work night and day to find something that would check it. Something that would really destroy germs and could be applied with safety to the human body. The result was Dakin's Solution. Thousands suffered thousands died, that this antiseptic would work. It accomplished its wonder in the war hospitals. It is the wonder of modern surgery, but when it was first given to the world, the world was only half completed, for Dakin's Solution was unstable—it would not stand.

Zonite may also be poured undiluted directly into a wound where it not only prevents infection but aids in healing, for the new antiseptic actually builds up tissue instead of destroying it.

Accidents can't happen.

Another important fact in connection with the war-born antiseptic is its prevention of fatal accidents. It is well known that the horrible catastrophe which bichloride tablets or carbolic acid may bring upon a household. It will be folly to keep such deadly compounds in the family medicine chest when a more effective and non-poisonous antiseptic is obtainable.

Zonite is being supplied to drugists as rapidly as possible. It is a colorless liquid that does not stain and leaves no odor. It is guaranteed to show by standard government tests greater germicidal power than pure carbolic acid.

Notice to physicians:

To secure a Dakin's Solution: add equal parts of water to Zonite; no testing required.

THE ZONITE COMPANY

ING to a settlement which would be agreeable to the various parties concerned. Mr. Brown represented Mrs. George N. Cranford, sister of the deceased, while Mrs. Cranford was represented by Attorney Cutts.

During the progress of these settlements in a manner not yet made public, it was learned that Mrs. Shepard's divorce from her husband, Hopson, were brought to the attention of Mr. Brown. The alleged circumstances were that Mrs. Shepard then Mrs. Hopson had applied for divorce from her husband, stated to be a non-resident of the state of Florida. This petition was filed in the name of Mr. Brown, and was denied.

millions paid despite lack of vouchers

Comptroller of U.S. Treasury Exposes Loose Methods of Shipping Board in Report to Secretary Houston.

Washington, November 20.—Nearly one-half of the total disbursements of the United States shipping board emergency fleet corporation over a period of seventeen months, amounting to more than two billion dollars, were unsupported by proper vouchers, according to the audit of the corporation's accounts submitted to Secretary Houston to day by the comptroller of the treasury in his annual report.

The audit was made by direction of congress for the period, October, 1918, to February, 1920, and showed that total disbursements of the fleet corporation were $2,732,915,213, of which exception to the payment of $1,184,226,243 was taken by the comptroller because of the "lack of supporting papers." Subsequent production of supporting papers, however, the comptroller said, resulted in a credit to the corporation of $70,625,898, leaving a balance as of February of $1,113,700,345 disapproved by the auditors.

Vouchers Not Presented.

The comptroller presented figures only up to February, but Martin J. Gillen, former special assistant to the chairman of the shipping board under Secretary Payne, declared before the congressional select committee on shipping board operations in New York last week that up to March 1, $2,700,000,000 had been submitted for the audit and payment of $1,500,000,000 had been disapproved because the vouchers were not supported by the necessary data.

Comptroller Warwick declared that "at least 25 per cent of all vouchers received were unsupported by documents or other papers" explaining or justifying the payment." It would appear, he added, "as if the emergency fleet corporation considered the appearance of the resident or district auditor as sufficient authority or justification for to impress funds."

Imprest funds are explained as funds established by the corporation and set up in banks adjacent to the plants of the ship contractors and car�peneurs were made from them under general orders of the corporation.

Audit Order Not Obeyed.

Effective October 1, 1918, the comptroller continued, the corporation's accounts were to be rendered in accordance with the regulation promulgated by the treasury, "but the audit of the accounts to February, 1920, would indicate that strict adherence thereto has not been made. Little improvement, if any, is noted in the February, 1920, account over the previous period." Despite the fact the corporation's original desire to obtain a statement of its accounts by the treasury, Comptroller Warwick asserted, "the corporation apparently found it well-nigh hopeless to get together the scattered supporting papers possibly to a systematized rendering of its accounts."

At least, he said, "the accounts were submitted in reports to the request of the department until the interchange of correspondence on the subject promised to reach an acute stage."

The audit was originally asked by Chairman Hurley, Comptroller Warwick explained, but was declined because of the limitation imposed on the treasury by law, until July 1, 1918, when congress directed the treasurer of the treasury to make the audit.

"While there was no reason to impose other motives for the delay, there was always afforded by the difficulties of bringing order out of conditions not hitherto required to be orderly, in accordance with given standards, the competitor continued.

"The situation presented began to look like a disregard of the law, however excusable. Consequently, it was my duty, as well as mine, to call upon my office to command to the secretary of the treasury that some action be taken to exact compliance."

Differences of Opinion Arose.

Differences of opinion arose between the treasury auditors and the fleet corporation, Comptroller Warwick said, over the course of time practice of adding amounts before payment, a method which was looked upon with disfavor by the treasury.

Under the audit before was satisfactory to the officers charged with the responsibility."

Under the system employed it was found that the evidence in support of disbursements was not required to accompany vouchers in all cases and presentation of such amounts was left in the hands of contractors and other payees, even if submitted in due form to resident and traveling auditors.

There was no evidence of the treasury and would mean little if shown conclusively.

"A prior knowledge on the part of commanding officers, unsupported by papers of record, would establish a reason why an audit by the treasury after payment would allow the audit and corporation officers before payment. By its action in requiring a treasury audit it would seem that the congress sought to have the facts so as possible, presented to the treasury department and the completed record of operations placed in the files of the department."

BOLLING TOUCHED BY SHIP SCANDAL

The money in the form of "notes," some of which he discounted and at different times described payments to Bolling and Sisler as both "payments" and "loans."

In another part of his testimony he asserted that the money was to be understood as a commission to him for securing a loan from the bank to the shipbuilding company, which the witness was then connected.

Sands Made Affidavit.

The testimony of Sands was prepared by that of Alfred W. McCann, a reporter for The New York Globe, who swore he had secured from Sands an affidavit detailing the entire transaction. McCann further testified that when he took the affidavit to Sands for him to sign, he declined to do so on advice of his attorney. Previous to submitting the affidavit for Sands' signature, however, McCann said he had taken the document to the shipping board and had it photostated. One of these copied carrying notations in what was testified to be Sands' handwriting and which Sands afterwards testified to being "correct" except that some of the facts may be a little different, was presented by McCann in evidence. The document, however, was not made a part of the stenographer's minutes of the hearing.

In the course of questioning by Chairman Walsh and Congressman Kelly, Sands said he did not think Bolling ever got a cent from anybody for aiding to get a contract—that money given him was a "loan." At another time he stuck to a statement that Bolling was to get his share of the transaction—that he gave "Sisler $5,000"—and that he had loaned Sisler for one of his companies $5,000 on his note, which note he still has. He said he had never had any controversy with Bolling and was on friendly terms.

with him. He also mixed into his testimony details of a purchase by him from Bolling of a lot for $900.

Division of the $40,000.

Sands testified that he was now under indictment "for allowing a company to overdraw a shipping company, in which I was involved."

He testified that he was then contracted with the Commercial National Bank of Washington, "as its earlier," He also testified he had endeavored without success to se-ure Mr. Bolling's influence, to have this case settled.

"This document says," Chairman Walsh informed the witness, returning to the photostat, "that $40,000 was to be paid in amounts the following manner: $25,000 to be paid in one lot and equally divided in the sum of $6,250 for each of the ushers—Sisler, Cranor and myself."

"Mr. Cranor was to share in this commission, too, was he?" Mr.

Walsh asked.

"The representative of Mr. Downey?"

"Yes, sir."

"I used to say during the negotiations with Mr. Downey came to Washington. He ratified the agreement whereby $10,000 compensation was to be paid."

"What I think I did," the witness replied.

Sands said he introduced Cranor to Bolling and Sisler. He testified to receiving the notes from the representative of Downey, but added there was one thing he

"Don't you know you never paid

Sands then testified he had purchased a lot from Bolling and that he still owed Bolling $900. He also testified to asking Mr. Bolling to

"I simply introduced them—that's Sands also said that he did not he did not insist he did not

"Well, I supposed—that that I thought at the time."

"What is that you thought?"

"You know what I thought."

"Well, he would not take it,"

Sands replied.

"And he never knew that he was to go to Mr. Cranor."

"What is that your understanding with Mr. Bolling as to what he was to do?" Mr. Kelley asked.

Sands replied.

FAIR COMMITTEE NAMED BY GORDON

Members Will Consult All Interests in Atlanta to Learn Sentiment in Regard to World Exposition.

The committee to sound out sentiment of Atlantans toward a proposed world's fair for Atlanta in 1925 was appointed Saturday by Councilman R. A. Gordon, who was authorized to take this step by a resolution unanimously adopted at a meeting of representative citizens held last week to discuss the movement.

Mr. Gordon named the following members: Ivan E. Allen, Robert F. Maddox, Lee Ashcraft, H. G. Hastings, J. P. Allen, and as associate members representing the three daily papers, Clark Howell, Jr., Major John N. Cohen and James B. Nevin.

Will Consult All Interests.
All interests of Atlanta will be consulted by members of the committee and the results of their interviews will be reported at another general meeting to be called later.

Assurance that the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce will whole-heartedly aid in the enterprise was received Saturday by Mr. Gordon in a letter from Eugene R. Black, president of the organization.

Mr. Gordon had suggested that the chamber assume leadership in organizing and preparing for the world's fair. The request, said Mr. Black, was considered at a meeting held Friday by the directors of the organization, who concluded, however, that a world's fair ought to be a movement of all the citizens, and that no one organization should replace a concerted effort on the part of all Atlantans toward this end.

Mr. Black's Letter.
The communication of Mr. Black is as follows:

Your recent letter suggesting that the chamber of commerce as an organization should take the lead in organizing for the world's fair in Atlanta in 1925 was on yesterday fully considered by our board of directors.

It was the conclusion of our directors that a world's fair in Atlanta would be of great benefit to our city and our section and I was instructed to advise you that if the citizens of Atlanta undertake to hold such a fair our organization will whole-heartedly aid in the enterprise. Our directors were of the opinion that a world's fair must be an enterprise conducted and conducted by all the citizens of Atlanta and that no one organization should assume either the leadership or the responsibility for the enterprise. We believe rather that the movement is started properly as a movement of all our citizens and should continue as such.

I would not have you understand that our organization is not deeply interested in this question. It is interested and is ready to aid to the extent of its power. We simply believe that a world's fair must be a movement of all the citizens and that no one organization should replace a concerted effort on the part of all Atlantans toward this movement. We believe that if this were to be done our organization would not care to assume the leadership in this proposed organization. We believe that the many organizations of Atlanta citizens, all of which organizations will unquestionably be glad to combine in this matter.

EDUCATIONAL SESSION CALLED FOR COLUMBIA

Work of Parent-Teacher Associations Commended by P. P. Claxton.

A citizens' conference has been called by P. P. Claxton, United States commissioner of education, to discuss educational problems in the states of Georgia, Florida, North and South Carolina. This conference will take place Monday, December 12, in the Jefferson hotel, Columbia, S. C., and invited to the meeting are the governors of these states, members of legislatures, mayors, members of councils, members of boards of education, state superintendents, state educational representatives from universities, colleges and normal schools, members of various organizations, including those of the parent-teacher association, farmers and labor unions, ministers, lawyers, editors, business men and many others interested in the improvement of schools and school conditions.

"No other organization comes in so close and with contact with elements of society as does the parent-teacher association," says Mr. Claxton, in a letter addressed to the head of the State Parent-Teacher association. "Better than all others they know how inadequate is the support of the schools, how poor the pay of teachers and how meager their equipment; also what is needed for the improvement of all these. It is gratifying to be desired that all parent-teacher associations in the states of this conference group shall be represented; therefore, I am sending you a circular with a very cordial invitation to attend the conference, also to designate delegates such other persons of your state organization as may be able to attend and to ask you to transmit this invitation to local associations throughout your state, requesting each of them to send one or more delegates to the conference."

The effort by the state P. T. A. to raise Georgia's quota of $600, as apportioned by the national board of education, is added to the national convention of the resolutions presented by the ways and means committee recommending that a quota not to exceed five cents per capita be raised by each state organization for organization work, is meeting with success. A large number of states are now in agreement in their apportionment. The campaign will close in December, and all associations desiring to aid in this effort are urged to make haste and do so promptly. Mr. John Glenn, treasurer, Decatur, Ga. The seventh district vice president recently made in a circular to 190 districts in that district that district and other districts have advised they will respond by early December.

WOMAN RELEASED THROUGH EFFORTS OF FAIR ATTORNEY

Miss Tommy Ruth Epps, aged 19, a sister of Thomas B. Epps, secretary of Wesley Memorial church, was released Saturday morning from jail following a hearing held before Judge T. O. Hathcock in the municipal court, on a peace warrant taken out by her brother, Mr. Epps, and her sister, Mrs. Ruby Rattenbrink, of 67 East Ellis street. Miss Helen Douglas, daughter of Hiram Douglas, law school, represented Miss Epps.

According to the testimony, Miss Epps had been confined to her room on a peace warrant for the past year. Sister Beatrice Henry, of the American Episcopal home, where Miss Epps was staying, was the character witness for the defendant. Miss Douglas contended that the girl had been mistreated at home, and won her case on that point.

Mrs. Irving Thomas, president of the Atlanta Kiwanis club and several other club women were present at the hearing, having been interested in behalf of Miss Epps.

Hopeful of completing Atlanta's quota of $40,000 to the $300,000 state advertising enterprise, Harry Goodhart, chairman for Fulton county, sounded an urgent appeal through the press Saturday to members of the Advertising club to keep working the coming week and complete their job of each getting ten pledges of $10 each.

The Kiwanis club membership has been given pledges cards by their president, George E. Hubbard, who is not asking big amounts; if every business man who has the interest of the state and city at heart would send $10, we'd have the fund raised quickly," said Mr. Goodhart.

The Presidents' club, the Kiwanis club, and other civic and commercial organizations are supporting the enterprise which is actively backed by the Georgia association and the Advertising club members.

The Georgia Press association, the Georgia Bankers' association and other like organizations have endorsed the plans for nation-wide publicity and development of Georgia.

GREECE TO VOTE ON CONSTANTINE

Plebiscite December 20 on Return of Former King.
Royalist Enthusiasm
Seems Dying Down.

Athens, November 20.—(By the Associated Press)—The Greek people will vote November 28 on the question of the return of Ex-King Constantine to the throne. The cabinet has decided for a plebiscite on this question on the date named.

Constantine has cabled to the government that he will await the result of the plebiscite before returning to Greece.

All foreign ministers accredited to the Greek government have called officially on George Rallis, the premier of the de facto Greek government.

It is rumored that chief command of the Greek army will be given to Prince Andreas, brother of former King Constantine.

Amnesty Being Granted.

General amnesty has been granted to about 100 German-trained army officers who had been interned on the Island of Crete, on charges that they had delivered Macedonia over to the Bulgarians during the war. These officers are returning to resume their places in the army.

Attempts are being made by the government to stop the sporadic use of firearms in various parts of the city. Soldiers have been put on guard outside the residence of M. Politis, former minister of foreign affairs, after the windows of the house had been smashed by a crowd.

Enthusiasm over the prospective return of ex-King Constantine seemed to be dying down in Athens today, although the topic of the dynasty is virtually the only one on the tongues of the people and dealt with by the press.

Athens Presents Gloomy Picture.

The capital this evening presented a gloomy picture. Rain was falling and the silence of the street crowds seemed to indicate a sobering down of the popular fervor, with the propagandists for Constantine unable, temporarily, at least, to find the fire of enthusiasm.

Meanwhile, news was coming awaited as to the attitude of the French and British governments, and also as to the reports that the ex-ruler will attempt to reach Greece and present to the allies the accomplished fact of his restoration.

The morning French minister M. De Billy, when calling upon Premier Rallis, saw in the reception room a huge, newly-hung portrait of Constantine, the former field marshal. M. De Billy told the premier sharply that it was a mistake to believe the allies would permit the return of the former king.

The results of the election have not yet been officially announced. It is predicted that a political quarter that any chance for a Venizelist majority will be nullified by a decision not to count the votes cast in Thrace and also those of the army.

Queen Mother Olga has issued a message to the people announcing that she was assuming the regency "in the absence of my well-beloved son, Constantine."

Rush Work by Day And Night to Get Girls' Jobs Back

Within 24 hours after the fire had died out on last Monday at the Frank E. Block candy factory, carpenters, bricklayers and helpers began the work of repairing the building, 200 feet long by 83 feet wide, which had been damaged by the intense heat.

This force has been working day and night during the past week in an effort to restore this factory to normal, and the men and women and girl employees in the candy department of this factory, now out of employment, might be put back to work at the same time the raw materials supplied promptly.

Every effort is being made by the Frank E. Block company to complete the repair work on the damaged portion of their factory at the earliest possible moment.

The heaviest timbers had to be milled and run to Atlanta to be hauled and turned back. Despite this handicap, the work has progressed to such an extent that it is hoped that the company can be reopened for the employment of at least by the middle of next week.

Every day last week, hundreds of girls thrown out of work by this fire, and the men of the plant, to make inquiry as to when their positions would be open to them again.

Brooks Morgan, president of the Frank E. Block company, stated last night that no effort or expense was being spared to restore the factory to its former condition and return to work the candy-making, chocolate dippers, candy packers and others who are now walking the streets unable to secure other employment, and awaiting the opportunity to return to their former positions.

He stated that all demands for Christmas candy were being supplied from large stocks on hand, in advance, and unharmed by the fire, and that a day and night shift would be put on in the candy department to make up for the time lost by the fire.

President Is Made Honorary Member
Of the 82d Division

President Wilson has accepted honorary membership in the Eighty-Second Division association, his letter of acceptance having been directed to the New York branch of the association.

"Of course I shall feel honored to accept honorary membership of the Eighty-Second Division, and I am greatly pleased that it should have been suggested," wrote the president. "I am glad to associate myself with you, with the men who served the country so gloriously in the great war."

Hundreds of Georgians, veterans of the Eighty-Second, were of great interest to the association. The members will learn with pleasure of the president's acceptance of honorary membership in the association.

No formal honor accorded the division was contained in a communication received in Atlanta from E. A. L. Bennett, chairman of the public relations committee of the New York branch of the association.

Soviet Russia Wins Virtual Recognition From Great Britain

That Is Meaning of Proposed Trade Agreement Between the Countries, Says Washington.

AGREEMENT PROVIDES FOR OFFICIAL AGENTS

And These Agents Will Have the Status of Diplomats With All of Latter's Privileges—France Opposes the Agreement.

Washington, November 26.—(By the Associated Press)—In the view of state department officials, virtual de facto recognition of the Russian soviet government is extended by Great Britain in the proposed trade agreement between the two countries. A copy of the agreement has been received at the department.

The proposed agreements, which consist of ten articles, provide not only for the appointment of one or more official agents to reside and exercise their functions in the territories of the other with immunity from arrest, but also provides that such agents shall have the rights accorded to diplomatic representatives of the vice of all passports and the liberty of communicating by code and cipher. Provision also is made that the "official agents shall be at liberty to receive and dispatch couriers with sealed bags which shall be exempt from examination."

Draft To Be Submitted.

Premier Lloyd George stated in the British house of commons

Thursday that the draft of the agreement would be ready for submission to the soviet government within a few days. He stated, however, that the agreement would not be entered into until satisfactory assurances had been received from the soviet authorities regarding the release of British prisoners and that the bolsheviks would retrain from spreading propaganda and committing hostile acts in Asia.

The ten articles of the agreement that both parties agree to remove forthwith all obstacles hitherto placed in the way of the resumption of trade between the United Kingdom and Russia in commodities (other than arms and ammunition) which may be legally exported or imported into their respective territories or from any foreign country."

The second article provides that "British and Russian merchant ships, their masters, crews and cargoes shall, in ports of Russia and of the United Kingdom, respectively, receive in all respects the treatment, privileges, facilities and immunities and protection which are usually accorded by the established practice of commercial nations."

The third article is concerned with the right of either party to the agreement to nominate such number of its nationals as may be necessary to carry into effect the agreements by entering the territories of either country. The right of either nation to refuse admittance to its territories to any individual who is persona non grata is expressly stipulated.

Diplomatic Privileges.

Articles four, five and six relate to the diplomatic privileges accorded the official agents of either vile in Pike county, the department has under construction 9.72 miles of sand clay road. The road from Barnesville to Forsyth has been built up by lack of local funds to combine with state funds, but work is likely to be started soon.

Between Forsyth and the Bibb county line, there is under construction 27 miles of sand clay road. This will relieve one of the worst spots on the whole route. Between the line of the highway is to be concrete throughout, and a good portion already is completed, including the road from the Bibb county line on the north into Macon, and out of Macon for several miles south.

Built by Convicts.

Houston county has a good road, sand clay, built with their own convict labor, and some extra work, with some state aid here and there.

Between Hawkinsville and Abbeville there has been constructed a concrete and steel bridge, 60 feet in length, eliminating a serious break in the continuity of the route, and another concrete bridge is being built over the Ocmulgee river at Hawkinsville.

Between Fitzgerald and Oella, in Ben Hill county and Irwin county's eight miles of blithuminous macadam road are under construction. Between Nicholls and Alma, six miles of sand clay road is being constructed in preparation for hard surface. The same is true in Irwin county. Also in Bacon county there is being built 17 miles of road from Alma to the Ware county line, eliminating one of the worst stretches of macadam highway travel in that part of the state.

From the Ware county line to Waycross there are 10 miles of sand clay road, and from Waycross to the Charlton county line, 17 miles, a blithuminous macadam road along the western edge of the Okefenokee swamp, and continuing for a distance of 26 miles through Charlton county to the Florida line.

Article seven provides that the British government declare that they will not take or encourage any steps with view to attacking or taking possession of any gold, securities or commodities which may be exported by Russia in payment for imports or as security for such payment.

Article nine and ten state that the British government declare that they will not take or encourage any steps with view to attacking or taking possession of any gold, securities or commodities which may be exported by Russia in payment for imports or as security for such payment.

Reservation also is made that the Russian soviet government will not undertake to make any claim to dispose of the funds of the late Russian government in London.

FRANCE OPPOSED TO BRITISH COURSE.

Paris, November 20.—(By the Associated Press)—The foreign office announced today that a resumption of trade relations between England and Russia will not change the attitude of the French government toward the bolsheviks.

France is just as much opposed to dealing with the bolsheviks as it was last August, foreign office officials said, when France officially informed England that it would not join the trade negotiations, it concluded in London.

The only condition under which France would agree to discuss the resumption of commercial relations with Russia is that the soviet government recognize the British debt and formally promise to pay France all her share. It was declared.

While France would greatly prefer to have Great Britain pay the soviet Russia's debts, she would recognize that debt. It was pointed out that the negotiations now going on between Great Britain and Russia will bring between the two countries, in which France can have no part, and to which she can take no formal exception.

WILL HURRY WORK ON DIXIE HIGHWAY

struction has started on a graded road 7.7 miles in length from Ringgold, the county seat, to the Tennessee line. It will shorten the distance to Chattanooga four miles from Ringgold.

In Whitfield county, next to the south, an important concrete bridge has been built over Swamp creek, a very difficult barrier, where numerous bridges have been washed away in the past, and maintenance work is being done on the whole stretch of the Dixie highway in Whitfield county.

Gordon Link Started.

The Gordon county link of the highway has been started with 2.5 miles of gravel surfaced road between Calhoun, the county seat, and the Bartow county line on the south.

The existing road in Bartow county is badly in need of repairs, and this work is being done by the state highway department. In bad weather this link often has been impassable. A combination of county and state funds will make a good road in all kinds of weather.

Cobb county's link of the highway is being bounded out with a four-mile stretch of blithuminous macadam road from Marietta to Smyrna. This work has been somewhat delayed by difficulties in obtaining right-of-way.

In addition to the above, the highway department also has under construction a western branch of the Dixie highway leading down through Walker, Chattooga, Floyd, Paulding and Cobb counties. In Floyd county the department is constructing a stretch of concrete road, and 17.9 miles of sand clay road in Cobb county.

Atlanta's Part Ready.

Running out of Atlanta to the south, Fulton county's link is already paved, as likewise the link from Atlanta north to the Cobb county line. Taking up at the Clayton county line on the south, the Dixie highway construction embraces 16.5 miles of sand clay road in Clayton county, which is well underway, and a completed stretch of seven miles of sand clay road in Henry county.

Spalding county's link is one of the finest in the south, consisting of ten miles of concrete road. Beginning at the Spalding county line and running thence towards Barnes-

ALLEGED GAMING DENS RAIDED BY OFFICERS

MAY RAID AGAIN.

Officials declared Saturday night that additional raids are probable, as other establishments are under suspicion. More arrests may be expected it was stated. From evidence gathered in raids already made, it is said, the operations of the alleged gang were on an extensive scale, and always for big game. Indications that the practices included swindles on fraudulent races, stock investment schemes, international exchange frauds, and "skin" card and dice games, were discovered at each place.

Entrance to the Central avenue place is by a stairway adjacent to the old Coker banking building, and the alleged dive consists of five rooms, a hallway and small closets and pantries on the second floor of the building.

The building was broken into and an answer a clicking sound announced that the door was unfastened. It was pushed open, and raiding party continued up the stairway. At the head of the stairs another heavily-bolted door with a wide slit cut in the top for observing any persons mounting the stairs was found.

Forcing the way through this door, the party was in a wide hall, which ran almost the entire length of the building, with four rooms opening on one side, a blank wall on the other, and another room at the front end of the hall, overlooking Central avenue.

FOUR JAILED.

Four occupants of the apartments were immediately placed under arrest, held in the Fulton tower in default of heavy bond, on three misdemeanor charges, each according to Solicitor Boykin, who will be brought to trial in the Fulton superior court. With the exception of one man, all the prisoners were white. Bond for three was fixed at $5,000 each, and one was held on $1,000, it was said to be a cobbler who was engaged in running a small portion of the pantries and hallway, was held under $1,000 bond.

Names of the prisoners are not disclosed at the request of the solicitor.

In the room at the front end of the hall was a brass bed, a small table, a bureau, a large safe, several chairs, and other articles of bedroom furniture. A search into the bureau and chiffonier resulted in the discovery of approximately $100 in gold, silver, and other small articles.

The rear room, it is claimed, was the scene of gambling for tremendous large stakes, where agents of the alleged syndicate are charged with using "loaded" dice, "striped" cards, and other contrivances to fix the outcome of roulette and craps, hypodermic needles. Officers say that the labels on the narcotics bottles indicated that the morphine was supplied by Dr. J. G. Williams, city physician, to J. E. Wain-

On the mantelpiece above a fireplace were bottles of antiseptic lotion, a small bottle of talcum powder, the article found in the room included a .44-caliber Colt 6-shooter, loaded; a set of instruments for trimming, a deck of cards, a small bottle of liquid which officers said was nitro-glycerine; a man's complete wardrobe, and many pairs of shoes.

STORAGE ROOM.

The other room fronting on Central avenue, which was also curtained and barred, was apparently a storage and piano room, for it was of wood and glass.

Next to it was another bedroom, containing a brass bed, chiffonier, trunk, two tables and plenty of chairs. The room was wallpapered and the walls were papered with a border of roses running around the top.

The next room down the hall was practically vacant, save for a chair and the floor had recently been waxed.

The rear room, it is claimed, was the scene of gambling for tremendous large stakes, where agents of the alleged syndicate are charged with using "loaded" dice, "striped" cards, and other contrivances to fix the outcome of roulette and craps, hypodermic needles.

According to Mr. Boykin, no cards nor dice were found.

VISITORS ARRIVE.

The rooms were also used for entertaining victims of the horse race scheme. It is the belief of the solicitor who remained with the other officers at the place late Saturday night. Only a few minutes after the raid, a telephone in one of the bedrooms rang, and the solicitor answered the telephone. A woman's voice inquired how certain horses were out in the races, and the woman told that she had called to ear.

After the telephone call, a number of men, some of them said to be prominent and others men and youths, came to the apartment and asked for "Mr. Mack." They were told by a plain clothes man at the door that "Mr. Mack" was in one of the rooms. Upon inquiry, the man specified the alleged victims were confronted by the solicitor, who grilled them severely, and then permitted them to go on their ways.

A telephone call was found leading to an attic over the hall, in which, officers say, has been stored large quantities of whisky and beer, in a refrigerator containing several bottles of a soft drink and six cases of the beverage were found in a pantry. Almost a pint of whisky and a small quantity of pure alcohol was also found.

CONTINUE PROBE.

When asked if he was of the opinion that the alleged syndicate had engaged in illegally selling narcotics, the solicitor general declared that he was not yet in position to say, and all discovery of the plot in such a large quantity was surprising to him.

He announced his intention to probe the circumstances further and said that if officers do not accomplish satisfactory results in the matter he will continue to conduct personal raids in order to gather information necessary to convict the guilty parties.

The solicitor undertook the investigation and made his rounds after the raid. Early afternoon on Abe Powers, of St. Louis, on complaint of H. E. Holley, weakly Aiken, S. C. man, who reported to the police department that he had been fleeced of $11,000 by Powers and his associates, who it is charged, worked the horse race track on him.

Following the discovery of the headquarters at 35½ South Broad street, the Fulton county police department for permitting the establishment to exist.

"This place bears all the earmarks of a dive," said one of the officers.

That night the police department said it would raid a place like this and fall to find anything wrong.

Finally two hours after a complaint about the place had been received by the detectives before the raid was made.

The third door opened directly into the third floor hall. In the phone, bearing the number Main 330. On one side of the hall was a room apparently used as a room for the "casher's" office.

The windows in the rear rooms, were barred with heavy iron grating, and it was believed that the rooms were unoccupied.

The kitchen was a bed, an oak folding bed, a bureau and a number of chairs.

The "office" of the alleged syndicate was on the second floor of the three-story brick building, room for various articles of household furniture.

Opening from the second floor hallway to a staircase was found a door with strong locks on both the inside and outside.

The door was located in the upper portion of the stairway door.

The raiders stormed the door and were on the stairway only to be confronted by a man who had a heavily-locked door. This was broken open and half a flight up another door was found with strong fasteners and electric push button was located.

A "peephole," like those used in the door of secret order clubs, was arranged in the upper portion of the stairway door.

SOUTH IS INTERESTED IN COLORED SCHOOLS

Final Meeting of Citizens' Conference on Negro Education Held Saturday.

That the south is becoming increasingly interested in the improvement of colored schools was shown Saturday by Dr. James Hardy Dillard, of Decatur, president of the Jones and Carter boards, at the closing meeting of Dr. P. P. Claxton's citizens' conference on negro education, in his address on "The Training School Movement."

Dr. Dillard stated that four years ago there were in the south four country training schools for colored youths; today there are 140. The enrollment then was 42; today there are 645 in high school grades. The number of students has increased from 20 to 824. The county

Glass packed foods are dependent upon the seal

Glass, as everybody knows, is the perfect container for foods. It only needs a perfect seal. Glass-packed foods, therefore, depend upon the seal to retain their original purity and flavor.

For twenty-five years the leading packers have depended upon us to supply a seal to meet changing conditions. Our developments have often brought into use new packing methods and new styles of tumblers and jars. Now we put our trade-mark on our caps, so you may know that the packer is providing the best that he can get.

This Trade-Mark Means Safety

You can have no better assurance of safety sealing. Look for it on the caps of glass-packed foods, and buy those which have it. Perhaps you paid little attention to this vital subject in the past. But don't neglect it in the future. See for "The Story of Preserving." We send it free.

contributions have increased from $2,000 to $20,000. In 1918 the general education board contributed $6,393; last year, $61,250; this year, $62,250. Originally the contribution averaged $750.

A committee on colored land-grant college policy, headed by T. H. Harris, of Baton Rouge, La., state superintendent of public instruction, agreed on the following principles, which were unanimously adopted:

"The masses of colored children should be reached with elementary schools, and a system of high schools should be provided to those completing the elementary schools, should be developed and the high schools could also, if necessary, pay attention to agriculture, home making and the industries; as rapidly as conditions will permit, the work of the A. & M. colleges should be confined to work of a collegiate grade and proper degrees should be given; the purpose of the A. & M. colleges should be to move the colored students into the industries and who are thoroughly trained and should be to educate women for home making and leadership. In these occupations should engage women's attention; A. & M. colleges should lead and stimulate colored people to live in the country and their own and operate their farms."

"These institutions should teach their students the importance of manual training, dealing with the trades; there should be a board charged with the administration of these schools; these schools should send their students to the cities and into the homes; there should be a fair distribution of funds between white and colored A. & M. schools, with no discrimination against colored people; state governments should support liberally the colored A. & M. colleges, no matter what the federal government does."

Dr. Claxton, United States commissioner of education, after expressing his thanks to Dr. Britton, state superintendent of public instruction in Georgia, for his services rendered the citizens' conference, said: "The people of the United States are showing their faith in education by their works. During the last fifty years the American appropriation for education has increased from sixteen to sixteen fold. During the nine and one-half years I have been in office we have more than doubled our appropriation to education. We are receiving in the United States educational commissions and serious inquiries from all countries of the world."

"At the rate we are producing manufactured goods, we could buy in ten years all of the British manufacturers in the British Isles and still have a surplus. We are getting out of what we produce. Of the three factors in wealth production—resources, native ability of the people and education, education—only education is within our control."

"As we add to the education of people we add to our wealth. In Alaska, for example, an investment of one dollar in education brings a return of at least ten dollars. Where the resources and native ability of people are great, the additions of education bring greater

REVISION OF RATES ON BRICK IS ASKED OF THE RAIL BOARD

A petition of railroad carriers in Georgia to revise the rates on brick published in costs per thousand and a half per pound, using five pounds as the weight per brick, was filed with the state railroad commission late Saturday afternoon, it was announced by Rate Expert, E. M. Price.

The purpose of the proposed change from rates per thousand to 100 pounds is to simplify the work for both shippers and railroads. It is stated in the petition. As the rates on brick will stand it is necessary for each shipper to be counted, while the proposed change would result in every consignment being weighed.

January 1, 1921, has been set as the date for the hearing of the petition before the commission.

Authority to determine the rates to benefit the Farmers' Cotton Oil company at Americus was filed with the commission and the hearing was also set on January 1, 1921.

The only phonograph sold without offering "easy" payments as the leading attraction

DO not be misled by the growing "installment" evil. Be cautious when you are offered an apparently attractive method of payment with some kind of phonograph attached.

Sonora is sold on a quality basis only and you always get full value.

When you buy a Sonora you buy it for its quality, the terms being of secondary consideration.

Sonora's superiority was clearly proven because "The only jury which heard and tested all of the phonographs at the Panama-Pacific Exposition recommended that the Sonora be given a marking for tone quality higher than that given to any other phonograph or talking machine."

Because of its tone you will choose a Sonora. Hear it!

Fair Complexion Conceals Age

Rid the Face of Pimples and Such Blemishes by Using Stuart's Calamine Wafers — Surprising How Youthful One Looks.

Pimples, blackheads and other such facial blemishes may be traced to an excess of impurities being eliminated through the skin, and this condition calls for calcium to enable the process of elimination to be carried on more completely.

It is in the Calcium in Stuart's Calamine Wafers that has given this complexion beautifier such a wonderful reputation.

The results are soon noted in a minute fine texture, the gradual disappearance of the blemishes and a really beautiful complexion. This is considered the correct way to a healthy skin. Just take a small cent box of these wafers at any drug store and observe how nicely the skin soon clears. —(ad.)

METHODIST MEET EXPELS MEMBER

Phillips Charges Politics Responsible — South Georgia Conference Ends at Moultrie.

Tenn., made a splendid address to the South Georgia conference today in behalf of the completion of the centenary program.

The conference voted to restore the credentials of Rev. J. L. Gilmore, Rev. W. B. Burke, of Soochow, China, and O. K. Hopkins, of Santiago, Cuba, who were presented to the conference this morning.

Bishop Candler stated that one brother objected to his pastor being returned because this brother's daughter does not like the preacher's condemning dancing. Bishop Candler inquired with emphasis "In the name of God when did it become a sin for a preacher to condemn dancing?"

Bishop Candler received a class of thirteen promising young preachers, composed of the following: Rev. Luther E. Pierce, J. M. Hancock, Matthew M. Pierce, Henry A. Billingsley, Lucius E. Williams, Zachary T. Granville, N. Rainey, Charles F. Chearouse, William A. Kelley, Oscar Wilson, Hiriam Clayton, Griffin James, A. Cook and Lee Roy Pilcher. Rev. James Oliver Burnett, from the Nazarene church, was received into the traveling conference.

Rev. Phillips resented the action of the conference and claimed that political differences with his predecessor led to his expulsion. He also denied the charge that he had made preparations to go on a deer hunt on Sunday, claiming that the only preparations he made was an engagement to go hunting the following day. A minister who challenged Rev. Phillips' character declared that he had gone for a dog and later into a store to get some provisions on the Sabbath.

The expelled divine also claimed that he had been offered a continuance in the conference if he would publicly apologize for his support of Watson and Hardwick, but added that he had refused.

Dr. O. E. Goddard, of Nashville was carried on the charge that he was "not adapted to the work." Rev. Cecil R. Phillips, of Glennville, who was expelled from the South Georgia Methodist Episcopal conference today, declared that it was the result of his activity for Hardwick and Watson in the recent primary and election.

Bishop W. A. Candler, in his address at the conference, cautioned the ministers to remain out of politics.

Dr. T. D. Ellis, of Macon, and Rev. Osgood F. Cook, of Savannah, were elected trustees of The Wesleyan Christian Advocate.

The conference members and visitors as guests of the chamber of commerce visited this afternoon the packing plant and other places of interest in and around Moultrie.

Rev. J. Moore, of the Travis Park church, San Antonio, Texas, preached to a large and appreciative congregation in the afternoon.

Born in Slavery,
Alonzo Herndon
Has Made Fortune

Career of Wealthy Atlanta Negro Brought to Public Attention by $10,000 Gift for Day Nursery and Kindergarten.

The purchaser and equipment of a $10,000 house to be used as a day nursery and kindergarten for negro children by Alonzo Herndon, Atlanta negro, has brought his career to public attention. Herndon was born a slave, and through hard work and strict economy has made himself one of the richest members of his race in the entire south.

Recently Herndon brought to fruition his plan of years to assist negro children whose parents have to go out and work for a living, leaving their children without proper attention. The place Herndon provided in the center of an Atlanta negro district recently was dedicated as the Herndon Community Center.

Besides being active in the affairs of the First Congregational church of Atlanta (institutional) he has given big sums to the Y. M. C. A. and Atlanta university. His income tax this year was more than $3,000 and his property holdings are rated at more than $500,000.

When asked what he attributed his success he replied: "I attribute my success in life to honesty and fair dealings to the entire public and ever remembering that I am simply a custodian of that which God has given me."

Herndon operates a barber shop on one of Atlanta's most fashionable streets. He has visited the most prominent cities of America and Europe to get advanced ideas of modern shop service with everything necessary for a particular public. His negro barber shop is worth $30,000. He has two others worth $15,000 each.

Born Slave.
Herndon was born a slave in 1859 in Walton county, Georgia, being seven years old when emancipation was proclaimed. Hired out to a Methodist preacher after having been at school he worked for his room and meals when 14 years of age. He tells the story of how he first learned that white men have warm clothes. He was given a pair of oxen and accidentally passed too near the corner of a house and damaged the building considerably. The owner, a white man, cursed him, but when he saw the little negro lad, helpless, he readily overlooked the incident.

The first money he made was by making soap and selling it for grease. He next learned to make baskets for cotton pickers. Later he hired back to his former master and worked him a long time when he was sick. In spare time he gathered black walnuts and held them over until winter when he sold them at 50 cents a pound.

At the age of 18 he burned charcoal at night and carried it 5 miles to sell for 5 cents a bushel. Then he began to work for a living. He made up his mind to remain a "no count" boy. He cultivated a little cotton patch and earned enough money to buy his first goat which cost $11 which he arrived in Atlanta. But he didn't find the city to his liking, so he went to Newnan, Ga., a short distance, and hired a room for $10 a month and stayed seven months.

Become a Barber.

In Senoia, Ga., on a farm one day he ventured to give a haircut to a boy and his work caught the attention of a number of persons who became his regular customers. He went to work for a barber at Jonesboro at $1.50 a week wages. Later a white friend took the shop for him. Later he worked in Rome, Ga., and Chattanooga, coming back to Atlanta in 1882 with a capital of $4. He worked and saved and was made foreman of an eight-chair barber shop. Later he was manager of the Markham house shop. It was here that he met Mrs. Herndon, his real star in life.

Ten years ago Herndon became interested in the Gate City Free Kindergarten Association and in several orphan asylums. He noted how children of his race had to be left alone while their parents were at work, following out this idea, he founded the Herndon Community Center. Several negro women have charge of the children. There are showers, baths and modern appliances at the asylums. Also, children are taught as well as home economics on a small scale. Also Herndon pays the rent for a number of old people and helps out the unfortunate of his race in many other ways.

Summing up his career, Herndon said: "I was born and reared in the south and have been in Atlanta over forty years. I have never had a cross word with anybody. The negroes have always been very pleasant. I expect to live the rest of my life and die here. I have tried to encourage my people to live to the best of their ability. Southern men, when you come to you, I believe with all my heart that it is the common man's share to be the man. If one doesn't succeed in the south he ought to begin to look around and see what is the trouble."

OPENS TOMORROW

The Doess Rubber and Tube company will open their plant tomorrow according to an announcement made by officials of the company. It will run on full time and maintain a normal production. During the past few weeks this plant has been in the market and officials have stated that the cost of labor and installation of new machinery made during this period will enable them to increase their production and still maintain their high quality of their products which they back by a liberal guarantee.

They state that they expect an immediate revival of the business and that many of their dealers have already placed large orders for future delivery.

EDITED BY CLIFF WHEATLEY

Tech's Battle With Auburn Looms As One of Championship Import; Squad Is in Superb Condition

BY WALLACE GEORGE.

Just four more days now and another Golden Tornado of Georgia State will have wound up a triumphant season and completed its chapter in history. Between Tech and the championship of the south lies but one team, the Auburn Tigers. The season does not come out on top in this annual grid classic next Thursday afternoon, there is going to be a disappointed lot of football fans in Tech, Atlanta, and all the surrounding territory.

A bit over a week ago it seemed as though Tech would walk away with her. Then a soggy day visited and then the unforeseen happened. Auburn broke into the limelight over in Birmingham a week from yesterday and ever since over the last two days and Lee General to the tune of 77 to 0. It was by far the worst defeat of the year for the latter grid iron. There was an overwhelming one that the whole country gave their hats to the victorious Alabama.

Simultaneously with this advance in Tiger values there was a corresponding tightening up on the practice around the Tech flats. In the rain, mud, wind and bitter cold the Tech men worked hard and the coaches led them through closed gates they worked every afternoon from early to late.

Off Day.

Saturday afternoon saw the first off day for the Jackets since Wake opened its season. Nine consecutive Saturday's made it a pretty hard stretch of games and the rest up yesterday will be a benefit. Tech's hard team took advantage of the holiday to attend the Atlanta-Georgia contest out at Ponce de Leon Park.

Tomorrow afternoon will see the team again. There will be very little scrimmaging this week, if any, and the practice will take up a general period of play that will be used to meet the needs that Auburn can produce. With no chance or danger of any injuries through scrimmaging we can only see clear sailing ahead. Tech's team will be off from 3:30 p. m. till dark for the next three days.

Just now the entire squad is in the whole southeast and taking the fight with Atlanta. Tech's team is only beaten. The Tiger defeat of the Generals' Centre's victory over Tech Saturday, and Tech's win over Georgetown takes in the whole of the midwest. C. has off and places Tech right up in the front rank of everything south of Pitts-

TECH-BOYS' HIGH GAME ENDS YEAR

BY J. LAUREN CLARK.

Slowly but surely the 1920 prep football season is drawing to a close, as only one more game remains on the schedule, unless the cadets arrange a game for Thanksgiving, or unless a post-season game is scheduled.

To the old-time pursuers of the prep pugilism game this game need not be introduced. It is always the hardest game of the season, and in the days gone by it was the largest crowd. For the sake of the new comers it may be stated that the game mentioned is the Boys' High Tech High affair. This game will be played on Grant Field the evening of November 27. The rivalry between these two institutions has been of the keenest variety. Ever since the Tech High was organized schools have been meeting on the Saturday following Thanksgiving to set an old-time dispute as to which school had the best team.

Tech in Favorite.

This year Tech High is the favorite, judging from the dope by several sources. Last year, as in many years gone by, this game between the two high schools decided the champion of the local prep league. But this year the G. M. A. has spoiled the game by defeating Boys' High by a lopsided score, and own half interest in the old-time battle the Smithies to 7-0.

But the dope being in favor of the Smithies does not mean that the Smithies have a win. Last year Tech High had to be beaten by critics to win by a comfortable margin, but the Smithies were lucky in breaking the game by a lone 43-yard field goal from Albert Jordan's.edu.

Boys' High has won one game this year and is being held open by the new comers in Atlanta. Since that time the Purple and White team has fought many battles, and has been forced to take the small end of the scores.

Tech Red Line.

Tech High is a great team and has lost only one game so far. The Gordon cadets of Barnesville are the only bunch of pugilists pushers that have been able to score more points than the Smithies. The "thin red line" of G. M. A. fought the Smithies to a tie, but outside of that the Tech High has won decisive verdicts over all opponents. But as Boys' High always plays her best game of the season against Tech High, a close score can be expected.

HEISMAN'S TEAM GIVES COLUMBIA SELECT DRUBBING

New York, November 20.—Pennsylvania crushed Columbia, 27-7, here today in the first game between the institutions in 15 years before a crowd of more than 30,000.

The winners carried the fight to Columbia at all times, save for a brief spell in the third period, when the New York eleven flashed an open attack that carried the ball across the line.

CONFERENCE CROSS COUNTRY EVENT IS WON BY AMES

Urbana, Ill., November 20.—An annual conference cross-country run was held in the field of entrants from fourteen universities. Ames, which had five entrants, and finished with 32 points, in the first time in years, was the winner. Illinois placed second; Ohio third, Purdue fourth, and Wisconsin fifth.

Other Material.

Draughon's Business college is planning to turn out a champion girls' basketball team this year, according to the information given by the expert services of Joe Bean, the wizard coach of the Atlanta Athletic club. This was formally announced by E. E. Hirsch, president of the school Saturday. This will be the first time that the school has turned out a basketball team and with the material on hand it is should develop a strong organization.

They have been practicing at a hard clip during the past few weeks and will soon be in mid-season form. Although the season will not open until the first of January, they will have a number of games with the girls' teams in and around the city. Their first practice game of the year will be played Friday night with the East Point High as opponents. This game will be played on the new Marist court and the game is scheduled to start at 3:30 o'clock.

Three Fultonton.

The team that have ever been turned out by Fultonton High, Anna Graves, Doris Walker and Frances Phillips are the three Fultontonites who are giving the other candidates a run for their money. Miss Graves was the only one to make the cut in the girls' league and it is doubtful if she has an equal in the state. Doris Walker and Frances Phillips played the game with the girls on the quintet that won the championship last year. These three stellar players have practically closed places on the Draughon girls' basketball team. The schedule for the season is being rounded into shape and it will be announced. There are still, however, a number of open dates and school will be in session about the girls' communication with the manager of the team. Recently the squad elected a captain and a manager for the coming year and the girls' basketball girls were elected. Miss Nina Graves was elected captain by a good margin and Miss Walker was chosen as the first manager.

There are two other former Atlanta players trying out for the team, Susie Lambright and Georgia Cunningham. Miss Lambright was a member of the College Park quintet for two seasons, while the latest girls' team is made up of Helen Cook, Anna Graves, Doris Walker and Frances Phillips.

Other players that have shown some promise in developing into stellar performers are Helen Cook, Anna Graves, Doris Walker and Frances Phillips.

Clinton High school in North Carolina, Annie Hadstock, having two seasons' experience, one each with Clinton, Clinton and Fultonton.

Tallapoosa High is represented by Mabel Richardson with two seasons of experience and Edie Wright with one year. Georgia Normal and Industrial college has sent Little Lillian Day and with three years' experience.

At the girls' college, Washington, Lillian Day had one year, and the girls' basketball team is strong a team out for this year as they succeeded in doing last year.

Tech High will have their letter man to Carter the cadets have Froggy Meiers, who also won much fame with the Georgia team last year. Froggy is as fast as a streak of lightning and this year promises to be his best. He will no doubt lead the team to victory.

Murphy Missed.

The cadets will miss Murphie Murray, their star center and captain of last year, along with Anderson, Eppa and Gomez. But Whipple and Anderson are the only members left by the team to carry on for a long time on account of his excellent work at guard, is back in school this year. This boy is one of the most successful players in the country.

Coach Burbridge has four letter men back from the wonderful team around which he is to mold his 1921 aggregation. Speedy Carter, who is a member of the team, has the football season fast drawing to a close, and only a few more games remaining of the schedule, the eyes of the fans naturally turn to basketball.

With the football season fast drawing to a close, and only a few more games remaining of the schedule, the eyes of the fans naturally turn to basketball.

The 1919 season was a huge success, and the 1920 season shows even brighter prospects. The run for the city rag was very tight with the G. M. A. cadets gaining the honors. As the season drew to a close the Peacock Bluebirds were pushing the College Park lads to the limit, with G. M. A. leading by only a few points when the two teams met at the Y. M. C. A. for a game which wound things up. In one of the hardest fought games of the season, the cadets ran a decisive victory over the Peacock quintet.

By virtue of winning their game with Lanier in Macon by one lone point the G. M. A. team also laid claim to the state championship which was awarded them without any further argument. Last year was the cadets most successful year in many seasons. And the 1919 College Park team, with their honors because of the way they were deserved.

Good Luck.

Last year was the cadets most successful year in many seasons. And the 1919 College Park team, with their honors because of the way they were deserved.

Good Luck.

This year Coach Burbridge has four letter men back from the wonderful team around which he is to mold his 1921 aggregation. Speedy Carter, who is a member of the team, has the football season fast drawing to a close, and only a few more games remaining of the schedule, the eyes of the fans naturally turn to basketball.

The 1919 season was a huge success, and the 1920 season shows even brighter prospects. The run for the city rag was very tight with the G. M. A. cadets gaining the honors. As the season drew to a close the Peacock Bluebirds were pushing the College Park lads to the limit, with G. M. A. leading by only a few points when the two teams met at the Y. M. C. A. for a game which wound things up. In one of the hardest fought games of the season, the cadets ran a decisive victory over the Peacock quintet.

By virtue of winning their game with Lanier in Macon by one lone point the G. M. A. team also laid claim to the state championship which was awarded them without any further argument. HARE'S MOTORS TAKES OVER KELLY TRUCK

The Kelly-Springfield Motor Truck Company To Be Operated by Combine.

HERE'S ONE THING THAT SELLS BELOW PRE-WAR PRICES

How would you like to buy sirloin steak at 14 cents a pound? Would you fill your basement if coal was selling at $2 a ton? Would you "wear your old clothes" if an all-wool suit could be purchased for $16? How about shoes at $3.60 per pair, women's heavy grade silk hose for 80 cents a pair and a full weight loaf of bread for 3 cents?

Just imagine, for the sake of comparison with present day commodities, a slice of 40 per cent from the prices in effect throughout the country in 1910. You would have, approximately, the above figures.

This unique comparison is advanced by the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company in announcing to the consumer their reductions ranging to 15 per cent in the prices of pneumatic tires and tubes to illuminate the fact that there is at least one commodity, namely, automobile tires, that today sells for approximately 40 per cent less than in 1910.

In an official statement the company said: "The result of the fact that before the present recession in prices tires actually sold for 25 per cent less than they did ten years ago and at the same time the cost of the tire nearly double the mileage, the public has given an unusual demonstration of the saving in modern quality production. In May the cost of tires approximately 40 per cent less than in 1910.

Coincident with Mr. Hare's announcement, the board of directors of the Kelly-Springfield Motor Truck Company has elected the following officers:

President, Emile S. Hare; Vice President, H. H. Ladd; Vice President, D. French and O. E. Hunt; secretary and treasurer, F. R. Hickman. These men now hold the same respective positions in the Kelly-Springfield Motor Company and the Mercer Motors Company. James L. Giddes, who has been president of the Kelly-Springfield Motor Company, was elected chairman of the board.

Prominent Auto Manufacturer Predicts Shortage of Cars During Early Spring Months

Shortage in Spring To Be Followed by at Least Fifteen "Fat" Years for Industry.

Detroit, November 20.—Fifteen years of continued prosperity for the motor industry in Detroit and a decided probable shortage of good motor cars next spring are predicted by W. E. Moore, executive head of some of the largest automotive and allied industries in the country.

In his Detroit office Mr. Chrysler attributed the period of "dumps" through which the automobile industry has been passing to prodigious production and paralyzing distribution, and to acquiring during three years of extraordinary motor car demand.

"Detroit has ahead of it at least fifteen years of continuing and increasing motor manufacture prosperity," said Mr. Chrysler. "This is as certain as anything in the future can be at this early date."

"The fit of the car to the road, which the industry is passing, is due in part at least, to indulgence due to over-indulgence. Readjustment and a return of nearly normal conditions in the industry may take months to accomplish, but the market will be moderation in everything except hard work."

"Discontinuance of production and delay in resuming it will almost certainly bring about a marked shortage in good motor cars next spring. There will probably never again be a shortage in poor motor cars. The demand for cars is only a temporary relief from the doldrums of the past few weeks. Sales are increasing satisfactorily from day to day. Business is in a dead torpor, but not death. It is merely in need of exercise. And the best exercise I know is to give the public a good value for its money and work hard to show the public you mean business."

"Manufacturers and dealers who haven't forgotten how to sell good motor cars are not worrying about the future. The chair warmers are rapidly going by the boards."

"Make no mistake—the automobile business is alive and strong."

I don't believe in wild optimism which is based on desire rather than on facts. But I haven't any pessimism for the black pessimist who seems only interested in the pessimists.

"The pessimists are the weaklings who expect business to be laid in their hands. The hard workers are the optimists."

"And I honestly hope that we will never again have business conditions which put us in a bind for the production of good cars and I have unbounded faith in the stable market and solid industry they are building."

Holland Firm Says European Countries Demand American Cars

American cars have made a considerable inroad into the favor of motorists and especially the dealers of Holland, and a great increase in the sale of these cars is indicated.

W. E. Moore, of the B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company, one of the executives of a big retail automobile organization with branches in leading Dutch cities, known as the American Automobile Manufacturers. This firm has just taken over representation of the Liberty Six.

Dealers connected with the American Automobile Manufacturers are in contact with a growing demand for American-built automobiles and expressed enthusiasm over the prospects of the market.

The firm has its headquarters in The Hague, where it conducts a number of places of business.

It has other important sales rooms and garages in such important cities as Amsterdam and Rotterdam. All of the cities in the greater cities claim an to represent the Liberty Six.

to my internal method for treating piles.

Mr. Jacob Lyon, Homer, Mich.

I wish that you could hear him tell of his many experiences with olintone salves, ointments, etc., before he tried my method. Here is a letter just received from him:

Mr. E. R. Page, Marshall, Mich.

Dear Sirs—Will you know what your treatment has done for me. I had suffered with piles for many years and used suppositories and anal stings and treatments, but never got relief until I tried yours.

Am now completely cured. Although I am 88 years old, and the oldest active blacksmith in Michigan, I feel years younger since the piles have left me. I will surely recommend it to all I know who suffer this way. You will use my name any time you wish and I hope it will lead others to try this wonderful remedy.

NINTH WARD CITIZENS TO HOLD CONFERENCE

Another Mass Meeting Monday to Discuss Gas and Car Service.

Ninth ward citizens—those living in the Highland-Ponce de Leon avenue section—will hold another mass meeting Monday night at 8 o'clock in Druid Hills Baptist church, where a similar meeting was held two weeks ago, to hear a report from a special committee of fourteen, who had waited upon President P. S.
Arkwright, of the Georgia Railway and Power company, relative to the gas and car service situation in that section.

At the meeting held two weeks ago strong protests are made against both the gas and renderers by the company and the crowded conditions of the Highland avenue and Ponce de Leon lines of street cars. There is a suggestion that the committee of which Dr. Charles O.
Jones is chairman will have a report to take back to the citizens.

Mr. Arkwright told the committee when it met upon him that it was quite certain there would be some relief in the gas situation within ten days—just as soon as the Virginia Avenue main could be continued.

On the street car situation it is not known what report will be made to the citizens, as a communication to the car officials will probably not be received by the chairman until Monday.

JOHN TEMPLE GRAVES TO GIVE LECTURE HERE

Editor to Be Heard on "The New Armageddon," as Wesley Memorial.

Colonel John Temple Graves, editor and lecturer is to be heard in Atlanta November 26, at Wesley Methodist church, in his newest lecture:

"The New Armageddon," as whatever subject he chooses, and in his long career of public service as a newspaper man and as a platform lecturer he has never failed to inspire

During the war he gave freely of time to the government and was one of the first to support the success of the Liberty Loan campaigns, particularly in the south.

For nearly twenty years he has been outstanding as a platform figure.

For quite as long he has been an outstanding figure in the journalism of America. During his career his headquarters were Washington, where he enjoyed the confidence of many of America's greatest men.

This is the second lecture of a series of six presented by the Atlanta Epworth League union.

and give other services to help in the work of raising funds for the poor of the city.

$200,000 Company Organized To Put "Zonite" on Market

Organization of a company capitalized at $200,000 for marketing a new non-poisonous antiseptic to be known as Zonite, which is said to be a concentrated, stabilized form of Dakin's solution, the celebrated antiseptic discovered during the war by Drs. Dakin and Carrell, of the Rockefeller Institute, was announced Saturday. The product is said to be nearly twice as powerful a germicide as pure carbolic acid, and entirely harmless to the flesh.

"But what is Dakin's solution, how was it discovered, and why is it remarkable?"

"Dakin's solution is an antiseptic.
It was remarkable because it was the one powerful gericide that would not burn the flesh and without danger to the human body."

"The known antiseptics, when war was declared, were divided into two classes: namely, powerful compound which would destroy bacteria promptly but would destroy body tissue as well, and non-poisonous compounds which would not harm body tissues but were too weak to check infection."

Surgeons Were Powerless.

Announcement of the formation of the company, which is made public for the first time today simultaneously with the beginning of an international advertising campaign in the world's leading newspapers, is of particular interest not only because of the unusual qualities claimed for Zonite, but by reason of Mr.
Willis' success in promoting other large advertising enterprises, and because of the fact that Atlanta will become headquarters for one of the greatest concerns of its kind in the world if Zonite is as successful as its proprietors predict.

Willis Is Well-Known.

For a number of years Mr. Willis has been a well-known figure in the drug and advertising world. The advertising campaign which begins today has been carefully prepared with a view of covering later the entire United States and foreign countries as well. The same series of advertisements which begin in the Atlanta Sunday paper will appear in the New York papers, and in the Atlanta Sunday paper will appear in the New York papers alone. This gives a wide range of the magnitude of the public interest.

The first series of advertisements will be novel. They will appear as discoveries in the products written by John Taintor, Poole, well-known author and playwright of New York City. Illustrated advertisements will be prepared to show various uses for "Zonite."

The proprietors of "Zonite" declare that their discovery is the most important advance made by medical science since the discovery of anaesthetics, and claim it is revolutionizing medical methods.

The compound is said to be a derivative of Dakin's solution, an antiseptic devised by Dakin and Carrell, two distinguished surgeons of the Rockefeller Institute. New England, during the world war, and which French, British, and American physicians have found to be one of the greatest medical discoveries of the age. The solution is the subject of much comment in the medical literature and journals during the war.

YOUNG BADLY CUT IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Struck at Midnight Saturday Night While Alighting From Street Car, and Police Seek Driver of Machine.

Police are searching for the driver of an automobile which struck and probably fatally R. W. Young, aged 27, of 227 Kelly street, at midnight Saturday night.

Young was alighting from a trolley car at the corner of Georgia avenue and Kelly street, when an automobile, said to have been speeding, struck him and sped away, according to witnesses, without stopping to investigate.

The injured man was taken to Grady hospital by a man passing in an automobile. At the hospital it was thought early this morning that Young had sustained a fractured skull besides possible internal injuries.

Merrillstown, Pa., November 20.—(Special) — The North Carolina Methodist conference today unanimously endorsed a national Sabbath law to be passed by congress to stop all Sunday trains. Sunday newspapers, Sunday mails and post office and to secure Sunday as a rest day for every federal and interstate employee. The same action has been taken by almost all of the Southern Methodist conference, and by other bodies. The movement was begun in the Tennessee conference in 1919.

Rev. R. D. Davis, secretary of North Carolina Anti-Saloon league, read the resolution of endorsement.

Noah W. Cooper, of Nashville, Tenn., who is pushing this national Sabbath law, spoke before the conference and said he would go to Washington to save the country, that unless this law was passed and observed the country in thirty years would be where Europe today.

Home of Friendless Tots To Make Appeal Wednesday

Tots from the Home of the Friendless are going to make their own and only appeal of the year Wednesday, when they will ask the people of Atlanta for funds to keep things going at the home for another year.

Of course there will be lots of prominent Atlanta women and lots of members of the Kiwanis club who will help the children present their plea. But in the final analysis the appeal will be the children's own.

Following an annual custom, four prominent Atlanta stores—Chamberlain-Johnson-Dubose Co., P. Allen Co., King Hardware company, and Muse's—will give a window to the home. In each of the windows children from the Home of the Friendless will be stationed all day Wednesday. Here all who pass by may see just how appealing the little fellows are. If they want to contribute, women and Kiwanians will be in front of the window ready to receive any contributions.

Free Will Offering. There won't be any button-holing of all passersby. People don't have to contribute unless they want to. But the women in charge of the home feel that there will be few indeed who will not be anxious to give, once they see the little fellows in the shop windows.

Every year the Home of the Friendless makes a public appeal the day before Thanksgiving. This is the only day of the year such an appeal is made. Nearly one hundred children are out at the home, which takes a pride in giving them the best available and is bringing them up in surroundings as nearly ideal as possible.

The appeal will be in charge of Mrs. E. M. MacLennan, president of the home, and Mrs. George Nelson, chairman of the board of directors. The individual committees will be interested in getting the children who will appear in the windows on Wednesday.

Babies in Window.

Mrs. H. P. Nelson will have charge of the window at the Chamberlain-Johnson-Dubose Co., and only the babies—some of them not yet graduated from their bottles—will be assisted. Miss Nelson will be assisted by Misses Helen Holt, Mrs. H. G. Ginn, Mrs. Cliff Hough, Miss Mary Nelson and some Washington seminary girls.

At Allen's the second nursery children will range from 3 to 5—will appear in dainty costumes in a "peach blossom" window in charge of Mrs. E. M. Veatch. She will be assisted by Mrs. E. R. Black, Mrs. Harry Bailey, Mrs. E. R. Black, Fred Patterson, Mrs. George Howsman, Mrs. B. B. Osborne, Mrs. Lee Aschford and Mrs. Harry Herring.

Girls of the home will be seen at Muse's in a "blue bird" window in soldier garb, will be in the King Hardware company's window, which will be in charge of Mrs. Herter, Mrs. E. M. Veatch, Mrs. H. C. Haller, Mrs. C. E. Bowen, Mrs. Berry, Mrs. W. M. Mills, Mrs. William L. Percy and Mrs. Ben Treadwell. The boys will be between the ages of 6 and 10.

ALL BREWERIES VIOLATING LAW WILL BE SEIZED

Washington, November 20.—All breweries manufacturing beer containing more than one-half of one per cent of alcohol, will be seized by the federal government. It was indicated today at the bureau of internal revenue.

Officials of the bureau said an analysis of beer brewed in a number of places was now being made and that where the product was found to exceed the legal limit in alcohol content, the government would act to enforce the law.

In a statement today the bureau declared that the Herancourt and Jackson breweries at Cincinnati had been seized after Supervising Agent Stone, who had analyzed samples of the breweries' products, reported that the beer showed an alcohol content of more than the half-of-a-cent.

Penalties provided by law in such cases, officials said, made the brewing company liable to fine or the officials to imprisonment. The government can also require bonds of from $500 to $1,000 that illegal brewing will cease.

Lawyers Favor Rules To Speed Up Trials
In Two Lower Courts

At a meeting of the Atlanta Bar association in the courthouse Saturday, two proposed rules designed to insure speedy trial of cases in superior and city courts, which were presented in the majority report of the committee, were accepted, while two other rules were rejected.

The committee, which was appointed recently to make a report in regard to speeding the court procedure, was composed of J. K. Johnson, chairman; J. R. Branch, Sam D. Hewlett, Winfield P. Jones and Stiles Hopkins.

The following recommendations were accepted by the Atlanta Bar association Saturday:

"Where a party is represented in superior or city court by a firm of attorneys, and the party to the cause may require full time of the leading counsel whose name as such shall be entered on the trial calendar, and the engagements or liabilities of the other members of the firm shall be urged by said party to defer the trial, unless in the discretion of the court the circumstances require a departure from the rule."

"No case shall be declared on trial later than noon on Friday unless it can probably be finished that week."

Recommendations with reference to having the same jurors in civil and criminal cases and of combining of cases against the same defendant were rejected by the association.

BOSTON POLICEMEN ACCUSED OF LARCENY

Boston, November 20.—Eleven members and former members of the Boston police force were held in custody yesterday on charges of stealing and entering and conspiracy to steal as a result of a grand jury investigation. Three of the ten men against whom indictments were returned already were in jail serving sentences for thefts. The others were arrested during the day. An order for their release from duty those still connected with the department was issued by Police Commissioner Curtis immediately after the grand jury was made.

Charge against which the men were indicted have to do with the theft of large quantities of liquor and preferred mornin'—valued at $1,000.

COMMITTEE IS NAMED BY ALABAMA SYNOD

Will Negotiate With Agnes Scott in Regard to College for Girls.

While officials connected with Agnes Scott college Saturday had not been notified of the action of the Alabama Presbytery, which in calling the Talladega synodical college for girls and its decision to arrange with Agnes Scott to care for its patronage, dispatches from that body were the synod's latest late work, were to the effect that a committee to negotiate the matter has been appointed.

The synod representatives are Doctors of Divinity Joseph D. Lincoln, Samia; Dunbar H. Ogden, Mabham and J. A. McSparran, Birmingham.

The synodical college at Talladega is a small institution. It will be closed until the close of the present year, having been leased to private interests for the past few years. It is to be abolished, it is understood, because of indebtedness of around $90,000 and lack of support.

No appropriation for Agnes Scott in return for caring for the patronage of the school was included in the budget voted to be raised by the Alabama synod in its educational fund campaign next spring.

The other chief morning pastime is the scramble for the "Industrial Rambling Bulletin," if wholly one sheet paper published through the windows of the Pullmans in quest of train and the sleepless newspapermen who are willing to swim in ink and stay with him on the prop.

No sale of the year has carried with it the significance that attaches to this event tomorrow. A special shipment of more than six thousand yards of surprisingly good outing is the basis for the sale. To that has been added this department's entire stock of 49c and 59c qualities. The range for selection is fine—the patterns are unusually good—the colors are good—in fact, everything tends to make these really marvelous values at 14c per yard.

WEDDINGS

Butler—Nicholson.

A beautiful event of wide interest throughout the state was the marriage of Miss Virginia Butler, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Willis Butler, of Madison, to Dr. James Harold Nicholson, which was solemnized at the Baptist church in Madison at 8 o'clock Tuesday evening.

The service was elaborately decorated, and Mr. Cornelius Vason, of the organ, assisted by an orchestra, rendered an artistic program before the entrance of the bridal party.

Miss Carolyn, of Madison, and Miss Hallie McElroy sang.

Mr. Dan Hickey, of Madison, was matron of honor, wearing pink tulle and silver, and she carried pink roses, yellow pompons and Parma violets.

The bridesmaids' gowns were fashioned alike, with bodices of silver and pink, and long, flowing shades over a silver foundation. The bridesmaids were Miss Sallie Burke, Nicholson, sister of the groom; Miss Pauline Nichols, Madison; Miss Mina Burney, of Rome; Miss Frances Burgess, of Clinton, S. C., and Miss Geraldine Hood, of Commerce.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson are Oglethorpe university, his bride's best man, and the groomsmen were Messrs. Atkinson, W. D. Dooley and Leon Walker. The usher was Dr. Harold Bugg, Dr. Roy Hay, Mr. Harris Burruss, and Mr. Roy Harrell.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, Dr. Edward Willis Butler, was lovely in her wedding gown of tulle over a silver foundation with lace which had been used in her mother's wedding gown seventy years ago. Her court train was of tulle and rare point lace, and her veil of willow. Her hair was a tangle of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of orchids and violets.

Following the ceremony, Misses Bessie and Daisy Butler entertained the wedding party and relatives and a few out-of-town guests at a reception at Thurleson, the beautiful old family home in which the bride's grandfather, David Butler, had brought Miss Virginia Walton as his bride before the civil war, and the reception was planned along the lines of the wedding reception of these grandparents. The interior of the stately old colonial home was a beautiful picture, with log fires and candlelight, and the numerous open fireplaces in every room. It was lighted by hundreds of unshaded candles and exquisitely decorated.

An elegant supper was served. Coffee was served in the west parlor by Mrs. Cornelius Vason, using a silver service which has been in the bride's family for three generations.

Mr. and Mrs. Nicholson have gone for their wedding trip to New York and other points in the east.

The groom is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. T. G. Walker, of Madison, and belongs to one of the most distinguished families in the south. He is a graduate of the University of Georgia and a member of the Alpha fraternity. He won the B. S. degree in agriculture and engineering and for the past few years has been a successful cotton grower.

Mr. and Mrs. Walker left Saturday night for Oxford, and after points of the southwest on a wedding tour, after which they will make their home at the groom's beautiful summer home, "Walkester," near Madison.

College Set Gaieties Of Yesterday Usher in Festive Thanksgiving

Yesterday afternoon and last evening the football belles and sponsors were the toasts of the town and never were there prettier girls to be seen. They had an early start in the morning, many of them cheering on the main streets when the competing football teams arrived. Later they were to be seen motorizing in gay parties, and then there was the great promenade to the game.

Little hats, and big hats; some holding back blond curls, and others darker curls, with the keen and whipping color to every pretty cheek, smiles on every face—all making up the football atmosphere.

After the game there were bright parties at the country club, or on the highways and then in the evening the social life began again, with the young people's ball at the Ansley. Miss Mary Cohen chairman.

Baptist Women Meet In State Convention.

The thirty-eighth annual meeting of Georgia Baptist Woman's Missionary Union was called to order by the president, Mrs. W. J. Neal, of Cartersville, at 10:30 a.m. yesterday afternoon, November 16, in the First Baptist church, Atlanta, Ga.

Wards of welcome were extended by Mrs. W. J. Neal, president of the Baptist women of Atlanta; Mr. Harry Johnson, for the city, and Dr. L. L. Grace, for the hostess church. Mrs. O. M. Gerald of Thompson responded in behalf of the visitors.

Mission Add. Bell, China and China Africa were represented by foreign missionaries, also Madames William Russell Owen, Macom, and J. C. Hark, Cartersville, were welcomed in their places of origin. Praternal messages were sent to the Louisiana, Tennessee and Oklahoma conventions now in session in the states.

Chairmen of the following committees were appointed: Apportionment, Mrs. Kate C. Wakefield; resolution committee, Mrs. W. J. Neal; Mrs. Carl Devan, trustees M. P. W. school, Mrs. J. T. Thompson; messages, Miss Maude Powell.

The president, Mrs. Neal, presided over the Mrs. George Westinghouse, vice president. Two splendid addresses were made. Mrs. J. Neal's subject, "Open the Windows Eastward," was a spiritual message, pleading that the Georgia women keep their hearts open to receive the light of the world. Mrs. Kate C. Wakefield, who has just returned from a three months' trip to Japan and China, spoke interestingly of her visit to those countries and our mission work there.

Old Fashioned Virtue In Needwork Guild.

The history of the Needwork Guild of America is more than interesting, and its methods have universal approval for all garments colored by the use of old lace charities. In other words, the guild is helping support them by a house charity, simply modeled after the original guilds.

Atlanta may be proud of its early start in this work and all the good accomplished by it, but a new record is sought this year.

In some respects the collection is double the population. We have 225,000, according to the census. Last year over 5,000 garments were distributed. The year "Let's Show 'Em" is the slogan of the Atlanta guild.

The organization has a universal appeal.

It has size, uniqueness and success for a background. For those who are not familiar with the charming story of its inception and growth in England and this country the following facts are given:

England's first "Woolmen" organization was in 1882 as a section of her care for hundreds of orphans in an institution provided by her. A practical working basis was established, and now the organization has garments once a year. This being the only question on which all members must agree as the organization is really international, conducted on the most liberal lines.

The Queen of England herself is a member and personally supervises the making of garments each year, but just as welcome is the donation of any other walk in life.

The American branch was founded in 1911 in Philadelphia. There are now more than 450 branches in thirty-seven states. Each one is run locally, and it would not be amiss to say that Atlanta's chapter has been in the representative women who have so boldly carried on this work.

Mr. Edward T. Brown was the original president until confined to absence from the city necessitated that Mrs. W. B. Hammond honorary president, and an active position of guidance which she did to the time of her death. She was succeeded by Mrs. Arnold Bryson. The vice presidents, Mrs. George Bell, Mrs. F. P. Perkins and Mrs. J. L. Carson, have always been energetic guild members, while the office of treasurer and that of secretary has been filled by Mrs. Fred Stewart and Miss M. A. H. Smith, respectively.

The present administration is urging that each member would induce others to join in this wonderful work, which brings such big results from a little effort! Everyone can participate, for the "shut-

Mr. and Mrs. Inman Sanders will give a dinner Tuesday evening at their home in compliment to Miss Perkins, who is one of the beauties of New Orleans, and was the queen of two of the balls at last year's mardi gras.

O. E. S. Home Coming.

An interesting event will be the "home-coming" reception to its members and friends of Oglethorpe club, No. 120, Owners of the Eastern Star. Wednesday evening, November 24, in the Masonic temple, Buckhead.

Annual meetings are always a source of great pleasure to those who have the privilege of attending. It is something like a big family reunion with all who have been scattered far and wide returning to the hearthstone.

Mr. A. L. Durbin, past master of Oglethorpe club, will deliver the opening address which will be followed by a musical and refreshments will be served. A cordial invitation is extended to all members of the order.

D. A. R. Celebration.

One of the most enjoyable as well as instructive meetings of the week was that of the Atlanta chapter, D. A. R., at the chapter house on Piedmont avenue the past week. The short business session presided over by the regent, Mrs. E. R. Kirk, was followed by a literary program of unusual merit. Mrs. H. M. Milam gave a historic resume of the coming of the Pilgrims and Miss Kate Edwards described the recent pageant at Provincetown. Mrs. J. P. Womble talked on the Virginia settlement and introduced Mrs. W. F. Dunn, who gave an enlightening account of the Jamestown or Virginia colony.

Mrs. Wren McGuire gave an ar-

Meeting.

The Hill Street Parent-Teacher association will hold its regular monthly meeting, Friday afternoon, November 20. Mrs. S. R. Durbin will be present on this occasion to talk on "School Lunches," and Mrs. Milam, Club president, will contribute to the reading. Members are notified that the association has planned a cup and saucer shower for the kitchen equipment of the school.

State Meeting, L. A.

to B. of R. T.

One of the largest classes of candidates that was ever taken in the south was initiated at the Georgia State union meeting of the Delta and the Beta of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, which was held in the Red Men's Wigwam on November 10, 1920. The meeting was held in the suites of the Atlanta Lodge, No. 239, Grace Lodge, No. 511, and Cherokee Rose Lodge, No. 606.

At 8 a. m. the visitors from Waycross, Ga.; Savannah, Ga.; Columbus, Ga.; New Orleans, La.; Greenville, S. C.; Charleston, S. C.; Birmingham, Ala.; Knoxville, Tenn. and Jacksonville, Fla., were welcomed to the city by Mayor Key. Mrs. Clara Brant, general president of the L. A. to B. of R. T., Miss Ada Marshall, first vice grand president, and Mrs. Mary Milton, third vice grand president, along with those present in the union meeting.

After the mayor's address the work of the auxiliary was beautifully exemplified by the Atlanta lodges. At noon the meeting was adjourned and the grand lodge officers and visitors were tendered a luncheon by the Atlanta lodges. At the close of the luncheon the session the grand lodge officers were presented with corsage bouquets of pink roses.

In the evening a reception and ball, to which all members of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen were invited, was given for the visitors. The hall was prettily decorated with yellow and white chrysanthemums and palms. Mr. C. F. Allen, president of Georgia Lodge, No. 66, B. of R. T., was the master of ceremonies and very interesting talks were made by the grand lodge officers. A very beautiful drill was put on by the members of the Atlanta lodges, the colors of the auxiliary being carried out by the red, white and green lanterns, which were carried by the participants. After the drill refreshments were served and the rest of the evening was spent in dancing.

Unusual Music at Capital City Club.

Carolyn Beebe, who perhaps is doing the most for music in America of any woman now living, will bring her New York Chamber Music society of eleven solo instruments to Atlanta on Monday afternoon, November 23, to give the second concert of the Atlanta Music Study club's series intime in the ballroom of the Capital City Club.

This famous organization, which was assembled five years ago by Miss Beebe, in order to present some of the best of modern composers which have been written for unusual combinations of instruments, has become one of the best and most discussed musical groups now before the public. It comes to Atlanta a week from now for its first visit in this city.

Included in the personnel of the organization are the following solo musicians, many of whom are internationally famous: Miss Beebe, piano; Pierre Henrotte, first violin; Jean Gossen, second violin; Samuel Lipschitz, viola; Georges Miquelle, cello; Emil Mix, double bass; Georges Grisez, clarinet; William Reddick, bassoon; Rene Corne, oboe; Ugo Savolino, bassoon; Joseph Franzl, French horn.

There are, therefore, five string instruments, three wood instruments and a piano which compose the group. By combining these in various ways it is possible to play practically any composition that has ever been written and the society is practically the only organization now before the public which is able to do this.

Because of the unusual interest attached to the visit of the society to Atlanta and the magnificent educational opportunities which it offers to students of music, the Atlanta Music Study club will arrange special seating for the concert to accommodate those who have not yet secured tickets. It is to be recalled that all tickets offered the public were exhausted on a season basis. The special season will be given on the same schedule as the Cable company and the price will be $2 without war tax.

The program as announced is as follows: 1. Bach, "Suite in C minor, opus 50, for piano, violin, viola and cello; 2. E. Pessard, "Prelude et minute"; 3. Lefebvre, "Allegro brillante"; 4. Lefebvre, "Allegro brillante"; 5. Georges Ferrari, "Sinfonia da Camera" in B flat major, opus 8—allegro, adagio, Debussy and Liszt, Steinway piano used (courtesy of Phillips & Crew company).

Rose Gabriel-Tabib, a noted pianist since childhood, has given several successful concerts in New York. She will spend the season at her sister's home.

Le Cercle des Annales d'Atlanta, recently instituted, has for its object once a week to group the annales d'Atlanta.

French-speaking people of Atlanta so that they would read and enjoy together the beautiful French literature. This institution takes its name after the Annales polono-anglo-françaises and "L'Université des Annales" of Paris, to which papers each member has to subscribe. Mrs. Linton C. Hopkins is the president of Le Cercle des Annales d'Atlanta.

For Mr. and Mrs. Cooper.

The association was delighted with a reading by Miss Mamie Gene Cole. Recently the association held a carnival and cake sale at which time a large sum was realized, a large part of which will be spent on equipment for the school. A social meeting to take place at an early date is being arranged.

The officers of the association are: Mrs. Edward DeWise, president; Mrs. Walter Guy, vice president; Mrs. Chas. Wm. Bernhardt, secretary, and Mrs. H. O. Jansen, treasurer.

The table was exquisite in the appointments of silver and roses. A lace cloth covered the table and silver plates were silvered. A basket holding pink roses, silver candelabra holding pink candles were placed at either end and the pink cards were hand-painted in rose roses. Covers were laid for ten.

Mrs. Cooper, gowned in midnight blue, charmed. Mrs. Poole wore brown georgette crepe, veiling flame-colored satin.

Thanksgiving Festivities Just Ahead And Here's a Sale of Beautiful Sample Evening Dresses

—Came from a manufacturer who knows how to produce lovely evening dresses. His season was over. He'd taken orders for all the evening dresses he expected to sell this season. Had no more use for the samples so he turned them over to us at a fraction of the price which he'd been receiving for these same styles. Enables us to offer

$75 to $195 Evening Dresses for $39.95 and $59.95

—No two of them are alike—and each style seems prettier than the last. Some of them are fresh as daisies; some need freshening up a bit.

—They're of crisp, fine taffeta drapey satin, fluffy nets, beaded nets and gold and silver laces. Tiny sleeves adorn some of them. Others are mere bodices held up by narrow straps studded with gleaming rhinestones.

—Some of them are overdraped with heavily embroidered net; some have skirts of softly draped chiffon; some have fluffy skirts of net—but it's almost impossible to describe them, for they're all different. Colors are flame, black, Nile, rose, orchid, yellow, pink and white.

—Want one? Then you'd better be choosing it—for $39.95 and $59.95 won't keep such dresses here for long.

Impressive Ceremonies By Eastern Stars.

On last Friday evening the various chapters composing the Order of the Eastern Stars of Atlanta, in conjunction with a meeting of the fifth district convention, held their annual memorial services at the Masonic temple, of W. D. Luckie, in West End.

The memorial exercises were presided over by Mrs. Mary E. Coley, deputy grand matron, who was assisted by a splendid corps of officers, and the various services were impressively rendered.

Following these services the officers of the fifth district convened and installed by Mrs. Ada R. Jones, Mrs. Dabney, of Covington, worthy grand matron of the Eastern Stars of Georgia, able assisted by other worthy officers.

After her installation as district worthy matron, Mrs. Ada R. Jones of Atlanta, addressed the convention and the large number of visitors present. In a simple frank manner, she spoke of the beautiful thoughts outlining the principles of the order and the purposes of the fifth district convention, organized by all the chapters of Eastern Stars in all the counties immediately surrounding Fulton county.

Hon. Charles Bass, grand master of Georgia Masons, was then introduced by Mr. Echols, grand chaplain of Georgia Masons. Grand Master Bass was the principal speaker, and in an impressive and eloquent speech he told of the cardinal principles upon which the Masonic organization and Order of the Eastern Stars were founded.

The beautiful tribute of the grand master to the Order of the Eastern Stars was responded to by the worthy grand matron, Mrs. Dabney.

This was perhaps the largest attended meeting of the Eastern Stars ever held in Atlanta, there being present about five hundred members and friends.

W. C. A. Peacock, Atlanta, an application secretary will make a personal call upon the daughter as a tribute to mothers whose daughters are in the service.

Announcements received yesterday of the marriage on Saturday of Captain George F. Lasher to Miss Georgene Gilbert Butler, at the home of the bride, in the city of Atlanta. Atlanta School Of Citizenship.

The third lecture on the Citizen school being conducted by the League of Women Voters, will be given Tuesday afternoon, November 28, by Mr. James L. Carson, on "The Government." The lecture will be given in the lower room of the chamber of commerce at 3:30 o'clock.

The school is well attended and proves the great interest held by women in all subjects related to their present political status. At the lecture Friday afternoon, given by Mr. Alexander, more than 100 women were present. Mr. Alexander cleverly illustrated his lecture by drawing up on paper an imaginary island, who had no form of government and wished to create a state constitution. "It is quite simple," said Mr. Alexander, "a simple statement of the framework of organization of government."

The Vote.

Mr. Alexander also said the giving women the vote does not make them better citizens, but that being as being a member of the community in which they live. Woman's Thanksgiving Proclamation

Three hundred years ago, in November, 1620, the Pilgrim Fathers founded what they called a free state, which they named New England. They proclaimed a day of thanksgiving because their plans had come safe to port after many storms.

For many years the Pilgrims sought a home to whom they could not come to work in the New World. Now the women of America have, after a long voyage, and many storms, arrived at their home.

Therefore, we give thanks to the women of America for the blessing of political emancipation.

For this reason the National Woman Suffrage Association, the direct heirs of the long line of brave women who, in the spirit of Abigail Adams, Lucretia Mott, Susan B. Anthony, Lydia, Elizabeth Cady Stanton, Anna Howard Shaw and thousands more, never ceased in their work for liberty, now urge that the women of the United States, under the banner giving day as a day for the especial expression of their gratitude for the blessing of political emancipation.

We the members of the executive board of the National American Woman Suffrage Association, offer our thanks to the Almighty God who has led the unceasing efforts of three generations to this hour; second, to the noble company of men in the fifteen full suffrage states who have in the first years braved opposition at the polls in order to enfranchise the women of their several states.

We thank the Sixty-fifth and Sixty-sixth congresses of the United States which stood staunch against fierce opposition and brought about the results of victory noted. We thank the president of the United States for his unpre-dicted act in personally bringing the amendment before congress.

We thank those states which cleared the way for the amendment by prompt ratification. We thank the governors who called the legislatures, the hundreds of legislators who responded to these calls, who endured journeys, resisted opposition, and voted for the sake of justice to the women of the country.

We thank all the political parties for their fine acceptance of the principles that just government rests upon the consent of the governed. We thank the minor parties which have since adopted the principles before the major parties and awakened to its application. But we also thank the two major parties which have since 1915 agreed to a political issue to be maintained, and who furthered the cause of ratification in spite of reactionary efforts.

Finally we give thanks that in spite of all obstacles the women of the United States on November 2 were invited with the political party.

We now have self-respect and new hope for the future, millions of them went to the polls and participated in the great presidential election.

We thank the minor parties which have since adopted the principles before the major parties and awakened to its application. But we also thank the two major parties which have since 1915 agreed to a political issue to be maintained, and who furthered the cause of ratification in spite of reactionary efforts.

Finally we give thanks that in spite of all obstacles the women of the United States on November 2 were invited with the political party.

We now have self-respect and new hope for the future, millions of them went to the polls and participated in the great presidential election.

We thank the president of the United States for his unpre-dicted act in personally bringing the amendment before congress.

We thank those states which cleared the way for the amendment by prompt ratification.

We thank the governors who called the legislatures, the hundreds of legislators who responded to these calls, who endured journeys, resisted opposition, and voted for the sake of justice to the women of the country.

We thank all the political parties for their fine acceptance of the principles that just government rests upon the consent of the governed. Tots of Home for Friendless

To Appeal From Shop Windows

To Atlanta's public Atlanta women leaders make an appeal for the little folk in the slums of Atlanta.

They are deserted by the parents who make every effort to help them at the home.

Others are deserted by the parents once had. In many cases the children of an invalid father or mother are put there out of care, or when the parents are cared for while the invalid parent is cared for by the other. Again in emergency cases, little children are sent to the courts until permanent homes for some reason have to be found for them.

In the meantime these children who are not wanted in the home are given a place to live in shop windows. Thanksgiving are looked after in the home. Those who are not cared for those who are sent to the world, some into good private homes—others into more advanced schools, many write back.

"When the great fire threatened to burn them out, the entire window was removed to the American for safety and slept there two nights. The children begged 'please take us home.' There were many who left the window and went out into the world, some into good private homes—others into more advanced schools, many write back.

"Very few organizations are able to establish so desirably a feeling of security and welfare for the children.

"We wish everyone in Atlanta could do something to help the children in Atlanta have better friends than those out there who are not cared for. Those who are not cared for those who are sent to the world, some into good private homes—others into more advanced schools, many write back.

"This year some new friends have been added to the home. The Kwanza club, which is sponsoring it, has been doing much for the institution that adds to its character and comfort, for which we feel the greatest satisfaction and gratification.

"We wish you this year, as always, when you see the children in the windows of Whitehall and Peachtree streets on Thanksgiving eve, to your hearts to help make this work for them surely as effective as in the past, and if possible more effective in the future.

"They have our friendship, but they also need yours.

"MRS. E. P. MCBRIDE, President.

"MRS. G. M. HOWSMON, Chairman of the Board of Directors."

Current Events From a Woman's Point of View By ISMA DOOLY

A Laudable Campaign

The proposed campaign of the City Federation of Women's clubs, the chamber of commerce, the state board of health, the Atlanta chapter of the Red Cross, the public health service and the Anti-Tuberculosis association, the schools and the city sanitary department to unite their forces in the cleaning of Atlanta is a most laudable one, and one in which the entire community should take an interest.

There is much work involved and the work of organization is now in the hands of representatives of the above mentioned civic agencies. The movement was initiated by Mrs. Albert Thornton, Sr., president of the city federation, who realized that such a movement could not extend far enough, or become permanent, unless there was brought to it the organized interest of every civic body. The result was the meeting called last Tuesday at the chamber of commerce when plans were put into shape, for an organization which includes a central executive committee.

In addition to this committee, every ward in the city will have a committee of well-known women, who will divide their wards into districts, with sub-committees to look after the districts, and these will work to have the residential parts of the city well organized to begin the work of general cleaning by December 11. In the meantime these ward chairmen, assisted by the central committee, are making a survey of the conditions as they exist in the city, so that they will know how to report their peculiar problems, for different wards have different lines of work to accomplish.

The chief of the sanitary department is making clear to the various agencies where his work begins and ends and where, in the proposed co-operation of all agencies interested, untold good can be accomplished. He has comprised a set of rules which will be of value, especially to housekeepers, instructing them wherein he can aid in the outside conditions of their homes.

Any plan which brings the outside conditions of men and women together to accomplish a civic purpose is both rational and timely, and is a move in a more permanent form of organized good citizenship.

To keep the home clean is essentially a woman's business, but she can not keep the community clean, the business districts, the streets and sidewalks unless she has the help of the men.

It is just as necessary to the comfort and happiness of the male citizen that his city be clean and healthy, as it is for the women citizens. Both have their organizations with useful machinery, and it is logical that they work together, no matter who takes the initiative, the men or the women.

In the meantime the city at large will be the beneficiary of the accomplishment of the clean-up movement, therefore the city at large should accord the committee in charge a generous co-operation. Both have their organizations with useful machinery.

Women in the Recent Decatur Election

In Decatur, Georgia, which may be called one of Georgia's most exclusively residential communities, there was recently staged one of the most model of municipal elections in which women voted.

Decatur, there were many families who have resided there for many generations, and several of these occupy homes which are built on property that is the oldest in the state. It is a community which made it possible for the Agnes Scott college to be built out there, and has always produced people of high standards and culture, and tenacious of the highest social traditions. It was a family in Decatur which to become through their continued patronage, one of the first of credited women's colleges in the south.

That does not mean that the south has not had for a long time many women's colleges of highest rank, but Agnes Scott college is one of the first colleges in the south to establish the standard in Curriculum which has been required by the U. S. Department of Education, for college education, and by the great educational foundations which require of a college a certain standing before it is eligible to receive funds from these foundations.

It was in the atmosphere of that college, that there lived the women, who awoke to the needs of their community, and who made themselves so necessary in the affairs of that community when the question arose as to whether the community wished to continue under its old form of government, mayor, council, etc., or whether it wished to adopt the commission form of government, that the men of the community urged upon the women that they take active interest in the community, and vote in the election which was to decide the matter in October.

The women had had their classes in citizenship, and heard lectures on the various forms of government, and they were ready when election came, on October 20, to vote and to be largely instrumental in winning the commission form of government.

Then politics "bobbed up" and the women found that their duty as citizens, called them into the support of a ticket which presented men in favor of the commission form of government, and another which included men still interested in the former form of government and its principles.

The women saw a school question involved, and other questions which particularly interested them, and on election day they appeared at two polling places in the city, working for tickets they favored. They met in the public places where there were doubtful voters, and where there was discussion of the merits of the men on the two tickets. They performed the womanly service of furnishing hot coffee and sandwiches, and in the entire community, there was evident every expression of good will and fairness.

Not one unpleasant incident is recorded of anything which happened to the women who participated, and the citizens' ticket, which represented the commission form of government generally espoused by the women, was the winning ticket.

Many people, students of the Decatur election, believe it was a model election, illustrating the easy activity of women in their new citizenship. Also it refuted so entirely the apprehensions of many honest men and women, and many of questionable prejudices, who have believed that women as voters would not give a fair deal, or that they would be subjected to treatment which the women who have lived under the shelter system for so long would be humiliated, intimidated or unduly influenced.

Mrs. Hays Delivers Address On Thrift to Florida Women

Mrs. J. E. Hays, president of the Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs, recently addressed the Florida Federation of Women's Clubs and, left to select her own subject, she with conscientious motive selected the subject of "The Thrift of a nation" which she gave her very interesting discourse.

Mrs. Hays, like many women students of conditions, knows that the women of the six southern states have not this year responded to the thrift message as sent out by the United States government. The work which the women of the nation needed to look after. The records in the government organization as well as in the General Federation of Women's Clubs show that the first of September the women of the other federal reserve districts have taken up the subject of practical thrift.

They have replied to communications sent to them by district directors and by the chairman of the Florida Federation of Women's Clubs, and they are working on plans which are leading directly to investment by women in government securities.

We Love Thrift?

Neither Mrs. Hays nor others directly interested in carrying the thrift message doubt, for one moment, that the women of the six southern states are failing in practicing thrift, but they are failing in recording their accomplishments in their speeches and reports, and in handling it in a business manner.

Therefore she is urging the federated club women both in her own state and in the other states to make the integral part which it is of good citizenship.

The Three Questions.

Mrs. Hays said: "Three great questions before our women today are: education, health, and thrift. Thrift in all its forms and citizenship with all its responsibilities.

Money Strain Is Over; Gossip of Wall Street

By R. L. BARNUM

New York, November 20.—(Special)—Between Wednesday, November 3, the day after the election, and last Monday, November 15, violent and continued liquidation was witnessed in the prices of food-stuffs, raw and finished materials and in stock market prices of industrial shares. This week there was a recovery in the stock market followed by dullness. What should be the trend of commodity and security prices for the rest of this year and for a longer look-ahead?

Taking up food-stuffs, raw and finished materials first, how much ground has been covered in the readjustment from a war to a peace basis? This movement started first in the early part of 1919. But then there was a recovery with the price trend early this year, that is in February there has been steady liquidation with only a few hails and temporary recoveries to correct oversold or technical conditions. Just how far has this liquidation gone?

Argument Is Possible.
Our best bankers here expect many industrial companies to write off losses at the end of the year, so that these losses may be deducted from government taxes. Unless goods or material purchased at higher prices and carried in inventories are actually sold, there is always the chance of getting into an argument with the government overwriting off paper losses. The only sure way is to take actual losses.

That will apply to the stock market as well. Holders of railway securities purchased any time prior to this month will show a profit. But in industrial stocks there are some heavy paper losses to be adjusted for income tax purposes.

This, plus the need for further readjustment in the selling prices for many commodities, shown in the foregoing table, is likely to bring about lower prices for industrial stocks in the immediate future.

But there were dull and uncertain as to trend, although several of the Liberty issues and the Victory notes closed at moderate advances. Total sales, per value, amounted to $71,720,000.

Old United States bonds were unaltered on call for the week.

The clearing house statement disclosed a sharp, moderate decrease in actual loans and discounts, considering the week's drastic liquidation of stocks. Reserves of members at the end of the week declined to $24,600,000, and remittances to London and Paris strengthened.

CRUCIBLE STEEL DROPS 5 POINTS

Fresh Unsettlement on Stock Market—Authority Reports More Life in Several Branches of Trade—Victory Notes Advance.

New York, November 20.—Today's brief session of the stock market began with fresh unsettlement, due to renewed liquidation and professional pressure among leaders of the steel, equipment and oil groups.

Crucible Steel extended yesterday's heavy loss by almost 5 points to the year's low of $5, and Baldwin Locomotive and Mexican Petroleum joined the long list of minimum quotations for the past twelve months. Sundry specialties continued to ease on what seemed like liquidated selling on the Hollingsworth and Adams factors were balanced by the firmness of rails and shipplings, but buying of these stocks was mainly for short covering to close contracts. In the week's end, dividends and general developments pertaining to the market were more encouraging. A leading commercial paper reported "trade" and remittances to London and Paris strengthened.

Bonds were dull and uncertain as to trend, although several of the Liberty issues and the Victory notes closed at moderate advances. Total sales, per value, amounted to $71,720,000.

That will apply to the stock market as well. Holders of railway securities purchased any time prior to this month will show a profit. But in industrial stocks there are some heavy paper losses to be adjusted for income tax purposes.

This, plus the need for further readjustment in the selling prices for many commodities, shown in the foregoing table, is likely to bring about lower prices for industrial stocks in the immediate future.

For the longer pull, it appears that the worst of the money strain is over. With the great number of "dime ducks" to be cared for in all lines of trade it is not likely that the loans of the bank will quickly return to normal. However, it is safe to predict that the peak has been hit. At the beginning of this week the loans of the twelve Federal Reserve banks were down $4,000,000, compared with the previous week.

Hopeful Sign.
Inasmuch as the weekly increases in these loans had been steady, this decrease was a decidedly hopeful sign. However, despite this decrease of $54,000,000, it must be kept in mind that at the beginning of this week loans of the twelve Federal Reserve banks to the member banks throughout the country still stood at over $3,000,000,000, against only $2,595,000,000 a year ago. A year ago much alarm was voiced by the federal reserve officials over the inflation of loans due to the rapid increase in loans of the Federal Reserve banks to the member banks throughout the country. This was $24,600,000,000, and excess reserves fell to slightly less than $12,500,000 against the previous week's total of $32,200,000.

PATRIOTIC EDUCATION

Message From National Chairman of Patriotic Education and Americanization Committee.

The chairman and vice chairman of the national committee on patriotic education and Americanization units in sending you cordial greetings; they are looking forward to unusual accomplishments in this time of unusual opportunities in the patriotic work to which the Daughters of the American Revolution are pledged and for which the society was primarily established; they promise you their hearty support and co-operation and ask the same from you in return; "The everlasting team work" of which Xiping sings will make great results possible. To this desirable end you are earnestly requested to make yourself familiar with the suggestions herein given and to accord them the needed prominence in order to intelligently and effectively direct your chapter in the various lines of work covered by this committee.

Prominent in the thought of today are to subjects which are recommended to you for special attention in this year. The first belongs in a peculiar degree historically, to the Daughters of the American Revolution; the second is to give prominence to the year 1926, which is significant in American history. If you have not already taken advantage of the opportunity to do so, please do so at once to plan for suitable observance of the 300th anniversary of the Mayflower compact and the landing of the Pilgrims. No town or hamlet in America should fail to honor at this time the members of the Pilgrim Fathers and their descendants. In the schools by which public celebrations are to be held, the D. A. R. chapter is too small to be influential in promoting such observances. The president of the United States has issued a proclamation for this observance. Churches will have special services December 22, the anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims. This year will have unusual significance. The second recommendation concerns the responsibility of the Daughters of the American Revolution to see that the ballot, whether they wished the ballot or not, it has now become a patriotic duty to use it. In an address given before a large assembly on October 17, the author of the Constitution said this day was made to clear that your chairman asked and received permission to use the ballot in the business on patriotic education and Americanization. The speaker was Miss Florence E. Allen, a prominent lawyer who headed the Daughters of the American Revolution. Inevitably, in this very election, women who have not shared our education, and especially women who have not shared our traditions of Americanism, will be urged to use the ballot by men who wish to use the ignorant vote to their own advantage. Women, who are women in whose veins runs the blood of revolutionary patriots, do in this instance. It is for us not only to act up to this duty, but to urge the vote ourselves, but to take the initiative and render every aid in educating other women. For the forefathers laid a great spiritual task—that of making real and vital to all the newly-enfranchised the spirit of self-sacrifice, courage, its self-sacrifice, its belief in individual and national freedom.

"What Comes" Once to Every Woman

Dorothy Phillips Answers Question in Latest and Most Elaborate Film

In choosing for Dorothy Phillips' latest motion picture vehicle the title, "Once to Every Woman," her director has made a clever attempt to commercialize that well known human characteristic—curiosity.

For no sooner does the individual see the title than the question flashes into his brain, "What is it that comes once to every woman?"

And then he determines to see the production and find out.

Of course, it may be love. Or it may be that supreme moment in life when true values suddenly become clear and one discovers the gold from the dross.

But whatever it may be, it is certain that the Baltimore beauty in the stellar role, will bring it out with her customary charm and faultless acting.

Dorothy Phillips, whose latest photographs, together with scenes from "Once to Every Woman" are shown on this page, has won an enviable position in the motion picture world. Her appearance in other elaborate productions, notably "The Heart of Humanity" and "Paid In Advance," has assured her a wide following which will doubtless be again delighted by her latest role.

Features of the film include a reproduction of the stage of the Metropolitan opera house and a scene in which the social leaders of Santa Barbara act as "extras."

Career of Cecil B. De Mille Reads Like a Romance

How He Has Achieved Positive Miracles in the Moulding of Opinion Through Screen Medium; His Deft Handling of Delicate Situations, and Almost Uncanny Ability to Pick People Who Have Talent for Motion Picture Acting.

It is less than seven years ago that Cecil B. de Mille, playwright, actor and genius, entered the arena of motion picture production and direction. It was an arena then—and is now—in the actual sense of the word. Makers of film plays were thrown to the lions of public opinion daily. Many a play was butchered to make a Third avenue holiday. The hot-polo hooted and jeered, were moved to laughter or tears, by the crude representations of the flickering sheet, as it was then called, usually with justice. Today, the evils have largely been abated, but the struggle goes on. The best survive, the fittest clamber to the top and some of them stay while many of them fall off the pinnacle with disastrous results to all concerned.

Wild and Wooly.

In the olden times of the screen, the lurid was given preference, the penny dreadful was transferred to the pictures and the wild and wooly was flaunted before the eyes of the starved natives of down east villages who straightway wrote their relatives in the far west to inquire if they had been scalped recently or whether the Indians had burned their houses and stolen their goods. The westerners laughed and thrilled in their turn when the screen displayed those blackjacking innocent pedestrians at Forty-second and Broadway in midday. The thugs do these things—but they usually confine their activities to fashionable clubs or ornate offices and their weapons are more often pen and paper than a blackjack.

Truth Not Reflected.

The truth did not find reflection on the screen. It was a mad orgy of sensation. Beautiful girls were abducted and masked men made violent love to them in parlors that looked like a corner of the salesroom of a house furnishing firm.

It was into this vortex that Cecil B. de Mille and his associates plunged and strove to stem the circular current that seemed likely at any time to engulf them. The Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as organized and a studio site found in Hollywood, a distinct leader—as a pioneer naturally is. It was quite natural, also, that others should follow the path he blazed with the marks of success, artistically, technically, financially.

The players were always—and still are—one of his most particular cares. He watched them as a mother watches her children. He noticed every little indication of improvement—every sign of latent ability, every chance for the enhancement of a particular player's qualities or for evidence of special qualification in some distinct line of portrayal.

Led Many to Success.

From comedies came Gloria Swanson, since a great favorite in de Mille pictures; from the same source graduated Bebe Daniels, who again made her initial appearance for Paramount under the de Mille banner; Mildred Randon was another and all the time the producer is casting about for new material, new timber so to speak, from which to hew the stars of tomorrow. But it must not be supposed from this that Cecil de Mille deliberately shows an actor how to act his part. He seeks always for individual expression, his being always the guiding hand, merely. But that hand has led many along the pathway to success.

"That's Bill Boyd, or William L. Boyd, to be more exact," was the response to my question addressed to a bystander. "This is his first big chance," continued my informant, "he is playing Miss Clayton's dancing partner in her new picture, 'A City Sparrow.' A few months ago he was an extra, but it won't be long before he'll be a leading man. He's a com'er!"

The Extra.

The question arose in my mind: Why is it that some extra people seem to realize success in a very short time, while others, apparently equally blessed with good looks and talent, seem to jog along and are never any more than extras. Here was a man who was just undergoing the transition from extra to leading man, and a man whom the sage studio prophet has just pronounced as "a com'er," and which term, by the way, has no limitations but the milky way of the film firmament. Doubtless this young man could say the very words which would intelligently answer my question. I sent a message up to him asking him to come down and see me.

"When I first went into the motion picture business," said Mr. Boyd, "I went into it, of course, to get something out of it, and to get ahead of the game. I left a perfectly good business, to make an actor out of myself and I didn't intend wasting any time in regression. I noticed very early that a great many extra players seemed too easily affected by the long waits that they sometimes had between scenes. I concluded that if a person is naturally inclined to be lazy, the life of an extra might develop that quality in him to a hopeless degree. I also made other observations of the mistakes that some were making—the most common mistakes, and realizing that I must start in at the bottom, I made a mental note of a few little 'don'ts' which I determined to observe. They were something like this:

standing in social relationships; he has indicated in unmistakable terms the necessity for a greater appreciation of the essential fineness of human relations, using emphatic means to the end. As for example, in "Old Wives for New," he wrought upon the sensibilities to no small degree by his presentation of the slovenly wife, clearly proving that it is in such intimate home matters that the evils of divorce and infidelity have very often their genesis. But he turned straight about and to use a colloquialism "put the skids under" the careless husband in a later picture. Nor did he leave his problems up in the air—he solved them for the public benefit and showed them how to avoid and how to remedy. His pictures are prophylactic as well as curative.

Not a Preacher.

Never does he preach, however. He presents a vitally interesting story in pictured form, adorns it with trimmings that are consummate work of art. He weaves the fanciful into the fabric of the purely practical; he mixes the material with the spiritual and shows the reactions that result. He is an artist of human souls, painting their ideals and their vices, their virtues and their dreams with a vivid hand. Likewise he is a vivisector of emotions and with his scalpel lays bare the vital portions that they may throb for an interested public.

But never does he offend; that is the marvel of it. He gains results by a mingling of realism and romanticism. His deftness of touch is a thing to marvel at and with it he combines a poignancy of treatment that renders his pictures irresistible.

In matters of detail he spares no effort. His staff of trained experts is the busiest organization of individuals that ever existed—when he is working. He will stop at nothing to gain an effect. If he needs a tropical island and cannot spare time to go far afield to find one, he deliberately transforms a rock in the ocean to a bower of palm and exotic verdure.

seeming little things that count for a great deal.

No Time for Leafing.

"The motion picture business, to me, is not a loafing business. I did not come to a motion picture studio to live a life of ease and carelessness. I believe that to succeed, in whatever avenue lays the goal, means hard work and undivided attention to duty. I have known of many people playing extra parts who continue as extras for so long and then seem to get in a sort of a rut, lose their ambition and thinking that any effort on their part will be hopeless, give up and content themselves with just going along and taking what they get and getting through with as little effort as possible.

"I thoroughly believe that a man possessing a reasonable amount of talent, can start into the motion picture business and by treating it like any other business or like any other job and keeping on the job all the time, that success will be his in time. There is no doubt of it, in my mind. Furthermore, I have and have always had a sort of blind faith in the kindness of Providence and in the belief that God helps those who help themselves, and that if one will only help himself by steady effort and application and then wait and trust, keeping up the effort in the meantime, there is no end of good that will come his way. In fact, I believe that with this understanding, nothing but good can befall him. Do not understand I am a disciple of good luck. I do not put much faith in luck. For with luck is associated an inclination to sit down and wait and let luck do the rest. My theory is this: Work hard and be deserving then trust in the reward and it will surely come."

"Irene" Big Musical Success At Atlanta Theater All Week

Its Appealing Story, Catchy Lyrics and Jingly Score Presented on Same Elaborate Scale That Marked Its New York Premier.

Judging from the way the show has been received in other cities, the nine performances of "Irene" at the Atlanta theater this week will hardly suffice to give all those who have been waiting for this smart musical comedy an opportunity to see it.

The engagement of the Vanderbilt Producing company's reigning success is for the entire week, with the customary Wednesday and Saturday matinees. Manager Haase also has arranged for a special Thanksgiving day matinee.

"Irene" is the work of those three up-to-the-minute writers, James Joseph McCarthy and Harry Tierney, who respectively are responsible for the book, lyrics and music, and whose ideas account for a large measure of the enthusiastic audiences wherever the piece is presented. The play contained every element required to satisfy amusement seekers.

Its appealing story, catchy lyrics and jingly score, together with a cast of recognized players, auxiliaries by a number of stage beauties, and a production on the same elaborate scale that marked its premier in New York at the beginning of the year, leave little to wonder at its tremendous success.

Montgomery has introduced in the character of Irene O'Dare, a girl who, though of humble birth, is truly golden, a veritable jingy prima donna, who, with her natural gifts, employs it in the right way, for as she amply demonstrates through the action of the play that one need not be a member of the upper class, if they will only use their knowledge, whether it be big or little, and some good common sense, and not be afraid to use them.

"Irene" will be presented here with two headline acts, each having a supporting offering, while the feature picture round out a most imposing lineup of entertainment.

The twin feature attractions are the Emry Quintette and "London Bridge." The first-named offering is the most popular classic in the musical line. The five artists, two of whom are charming young ladies, have modeled their vehicle along strictly advanced lines. They sing with varying intonations as they do in vocalistics and their repertoire is a cosmopolitan assemblage of selections from standard repertoires.

"London Bridge" is a highly comic sketch staged by Thomas Race and Fred Edge. This pair hail from the New York company before havink been signed, to see if they were fitted for their respective parts, and the day they signed, Captain Mulqueen, who will be seen in the title role, Amelia Summerville, whose fame as a singer dates from the Little Mountain days, "Adonis" is well known on both sides of the Atlantic; Lizzie McCaull, Nina Penn, Grace La Salle, and the young comedian, Bert Carroll, Bobby Burns, Austin Clarke, George Elsing, James Curran, and a slightly chorus, who will be singing and dancing.

Among the song hits that will in all probability find favor, none will become more popular than "Alice Down Town," "Irene," "She-Wives," "Last Page of the Party," "To Love You" and "Castle of Dreams."

TWO HEADLINE ACTS ON GRAND PROGRAM

Emry Quintet and "London Bridge" Both Entertaining Musical Acts.

Even though it follows immediately upon the heels of "Buzza Around," last week's success at Lowe's Grand, the program announced for Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday promises to equal any previous high-water mark of popularity.

Two headline acts have been booked for Grand patrons, while the supporting offerings and the feature picture round out a most imposing lineup of entertainment.

Don'ts to Screen-Struck Girls

5—DON'T BE LAZY.

As in all other enterprises, the biggest successes in filmdom go to those who are alert and active. The chronically lazy, those who are late to work; who loll listlessly around the "set" when not actually in a scene—are those who sooner or later fall into the "failure" class.

There is so much to learn in this business that requires a clear watchful brain; one that is cluttered with the debris of slothful thought and action.

One of the best ways to avoid being a seeming lazzadore is to adopt a schedule of living far removed from lazy habits. School yourself to a vigorous course of exercise the first thing in the morning to clear your brain and cause the blood to course through your veins in a way to make you glad you're alive; to take quiet walks, for instance, an absolute matter of approaching the day's work.

But such a regime is only a start; if you wish to attain your goal, it demands that you be all out from the curse of laziness. Supplementing the morning exercises should be a definite program of outdoor sports, as well as in the evenings, after your work makes it possible.

Personally I take a ride on my big saddle horse, "Sea Gull," every morning. I ride it for all I can get from the curse of laziness. Supplementing the morning exercises should be a definite program of outdoor sports, as well as in the evenings, after your work makes it possible.

FILM BY-PATHS

By ROGER STARBUCK.

The other day I came upon one of our most charming young actresses of the silent drama, knitting industriously with four needles on an embroidery stool. She was on William de Mille's set and the picture, a release of the future, was Sir James M. Barrie's "What Every Woman Knows." The lady in question was Miss Wilson, who will play the Maude Adams role.

"Why so industrious?" I asked her.

"It is part of my duty, sir," she said. "And would you believe it, I had to learn to knit with four needles just for the picture. During the time I knitted several needles and other things, but never could I manipulate four needles without getting all tangled up. In this picture I had to do so, and I practiced until I became proficient. I didn't all alone have to learn to use a typewriter expertly. I practiced that at home, too, and now I can qualify as a typist."

Which goes to show how modern film folks strive for realism and how insistent directing producers are. William de Mille makes one thing—a few years ago it would not have mattered whether the lady knitted a sock or a pair of suspenders, or whether she could write in ink or not. In this time for all good men, etc., on a typewriter. Things do move—in moving pictures.

"You at last," he concluded. "The one question is—will you be a model for my picture?"

"Your perfect husband has found wife!"

Quits "Aphrodite."

Dorothy Dalton has left "Aphrodite" and is working in the New York studio of the Famous Players-Lasky corporation.

BY SHAW DESMOND.

London, November 20.—The problem which at the moment is engrossing the fullest, fiercest energy of the British authorities is the ex-service man.

The concrete fact is an army of some 200,000 workless ex-soldiers and some 14,000 jobless ex-officers, all of whom have faced poison gas, "laming" jet and "Jack Johnson" on the west front, but now are kicked out of their beds, with their hearts waiting for the work that doesn't come, and who, trained gladiators as they are and discontented men for the last four years, according to the pessimists, might crystallize that seething mass of working-class discontent which since Armistice day has been gathering in Asquith's ferment, waiting for the Bolshevik signal to go loose.

A Compromised Revolution.

When you hear in America that the English workman is Bolshevik and may win the war, the bloody murder you can forget it straight away. It is not true. Just because he hates physical force, like most quiet men, he is apt to let the law turn them out. The law has come to the dirty work.

One-Half "Non-Efficient."

The first thing that meets the expert eye upon solving the apparent contradiction is the fact that this army of a quarter of a million can be divided into two classes—the "efficients" and the "non-efficients." About one-half are for an ex-officer who had been earning a living as a pavement artist on the continent. He held a job only ten days. Then he was "fed up" he said.

Men Who "Don't Know."

Hundreds of men will past you and in response to your question—"What do you want?" they will say, "I don't know. I want a position of trust." When you ask them what they can do, they don't know. This is the most hopeless, hideous piece of business in Europe today.

Our "efficients" we can subdivide into the "trained" and the "untrained." The former can be used at once, and the jobs are there for them, as for all specialists. But the latter are in overwhelming majority.

Destroyed for Civil Life.

The "inefficients" form a bewildering problem. God alone knows how they can be split up. A perfect big section of them is formed of the man who might work if he were put to it, but probably can't, either because he is not skilled or because he is not the biggest problem of all—the "biggest problem"—he can't concentrate.

I have the very highest military opinion in the world that the man for hard work in civil life, if it is, is the army that destroys the man for work in civil life. It is, I have reason to believe, Earl Haig's view. He is right. The man who has two or three or more than forty employments can be depended upon. Army life kills individuality by the man becoming a tool for the state. The world has to think for himself.

Two other classes of the "inefficients" are the man who has sunk psychologically below the line at which a man is employable and the partially or wholly disabled soldier.

Want Another War.

Here enters the psychological factor of the "inefficient." There are many ex-service men who want another good war. "At least we used to get our meals regular."

The free and easy life with death tressing at the heels of the fight is the look of "inefficiency" with the wild reckless life of those intervals, have made some of the ex-service men utterly, perhaps permanently, incapable of work.

Official estimates in England and Wales for the first half of 1920 put the net increase in population at more than half a million. Unofficial estimates put the increase over 1914 at more than a million.

Even before the war, England and Wales suffered from having a larger population than the prevailing economic system succeeded in supporting.

Now with the system largely disrupted by the lingering effects of the war, everybody is saying something ought to be done about it, but everybody is in agreement to just what that something should be.

Individuals, however, regardless of government policies, or economic professors of economics and social theorists, are setting out to solve the problem themselves. They find the art of "survival" very well.

Very well, what's surplus population to do if not eliminate itself?

Emigrate to America.

No individuals have been steadily eliminating themselves from Europe to this date. They have, however, they don't know any special work.

The other day we had a job as secretary to an agricultural trade union offered for an ex-service officer. Out of our 14,000 there were only three possible and one of them are today brigadier generals who would get £100 a week.

A friend of mine enlisted as a private in the Sussex regiment, rose to brigadier general, and today would get only £10 a week. A distinguished ex-service officer went the other day to Buckingham Palace to get his D.S.O. pinned on by the King. He was three days borrowing a presentable coat in which to go, and the King, who had not had a decent meal for 24 hours. The King was much shocked at this. I happen to know, but what of the hundreds of others?

A personal experience of visiting the captains of industry in "the city" as the business quarter of London is called, including engineers, financiers, bankers, etc., has convinced me that, while frankly, the average employer "doesn't want the ex-service man" and sometimes doesn't hesitate to say so.

Employer after employer has said to me: "The ex-service man is no use. We only look at him." One man said: "I don't want him general; the qualities that make the general make him no good for me."

Both sides of the brawny some fifty jobs were unmet by some writer within some weeks, but The London Times, despite a big boom in certain of some months, has not been able to opportunity to affect the problem of getting the men work. Nobody wants them."

Soldier-Patriot Maid.

Then the authorities are up against another type of employer who won't have the ex-service man because he has long since replaced him, despite promises to give him a job open after the war by cheap female labor. I have been in a bank and in a room 25 girls and one solitary man were sitting. I had the opportunity of seeing the correspondence bags of a London newspaper which proved conclusively that the great majority of women in England would be only too glad to take advantage of the need of these men, offering "man-power" for a few months. (many society women and others are replacing their women servants by ex-soldiers, finding them cheaper than what are really starvation wages to gamekeepers, stewards, etc.

They Stayed at Home.

It is a fact that the men today who are the best position in British business are the ones who never have been in the trenches but who kept the grip on the business whilst the others were being trained. The ex-service men know this and it galls them.

Anyhow, the root fact remains that nearly two years after the conclusion of the war, the men have this apparently permanent army of discontent of a quarter of a million (plus hundreds of thousands of dependents) in the midst.

As it has been paraphrased: "The ex-service men we have always with us."

Let's at least look at what the government has done to solve the problem and the reason for its failure.

In the first place the government heads attacked the problem from the wrong end by creating a tremendous machine of unemployment dependent upon the real problem to be faced and so constructed the machine as they went.

In the second, the only men who are now employed by the employers themselves have been largely ignored, or where not ignored, have been ground into the official machine.

The greatest efficiency expert of the British empire, Charles F. Higham, M.P., himself told me the other day that only the government departments shown that fatal lack of imagination in dealing with the ex-service man which he himself got from the official mind but that "the men" are probably even more than the official "inefficients."

As this is being written, however, the government as represented by the minister of labor, Dr. T. J. Macnamara, is putting the ex-service players of labor outside, and out of this collaboration we are likely to see some kind of a new scheme upon something like the following.

An elaborate though simple card system index will be instituted through which each ex-service man unemployed will be first put into either the "inefficient" or "inefficient" category, and then into one of the subsections "skilled" "unskilled," etc.

The next thing to be done will be the careful and accurate sorting of the men into their various crafts, trades, professions, showing in the "efficiency" of their training and placing the "inefficient" and the "unemployed" and other sections.

Then, and this is what is needed exactly what the "inefficients" can do and what salary they can for doing it, a delicate and dangerous task.

Bringing them face to face with those facts which the ex-service man so assiduously shiedstes and tell them as far as possible for them to earn and how much they can earn it.

The next step upon which the actual finding of work depends, will be to put the business community by carefully reading the series of advertisements as well as personal approach, exactly what types are available. A guarantee

TOO MANY BABIES CAUSES PROBLEM

Europe's Surplus Population Augmented by Millions of Births—Many Are Emigrating.

BY GEORGE CARLIN.

London, November 20.—Those cheerful Malthusians who looked with grim content as the war swept away what they reckoned as the excess population of Europe, are now beginning to feel a trifling puzzle. True there are reports of whole nations perishing from starvation and pestilence and some effort is being made in Ireland toward the extermination of the species, yet the still spreads through the land that Europe is still suffering from its old complaint of "too many people."

Official estimates in England and Wales for the first half of 1920 put the net increase in population at more than half a million. Unofficial estimates put the increase over 1914 at more than a million.

Even before the war, England and Wales suffered from having a larger population than the prevailing economic system succeeded in supporting.

The next step upon which the actual finding of work depends, will be to put the business community by carefully reading the series of advertisements as well as personal approach, exactly what types are available. A guarantee is adopting them gives assistance over the preliminary stage of a new state.

Applications are reported to be pouring in to the overseas settlement committee at the rate of 1,000 a week. Meanwhile the population of the islands is going up at the rate of 10,000 a week.

Most of this population is in London, but every year sees people in these islands live in London. And London is making a record of congestion for itself.

Come From Continent.

In addition to its own crowded multitudes, it is receiving all the time a stream of emigrants from the continent en route to America for the most part. These emigrants are fortunate when they can obtain a direct passage connected with the steamship lines.

True there are reports of whole nations perishing from starvation and pestilence and some effort is being made in Ireland toward the extermination of the species, yet the still spreads through the land that Europe is still suffering from its old complaint of "too many people."

It is only an eddy in the stream of emigration which is fleeing Europe. In Europe, particularly in Austria, and Trieste, are swarming up through French ports, getting blocked at the frontier, driven into Switzerland, marching back into Galicia and Hungary and, taking on a Hebrew flavor, fleeing to the Holy Land to trudge down toward Palestine.

Europe's answer to the surplus population is: "Get out!" Surplus population comes right back and answers: "Leave us alone and we'll leave you alone. You don't have to kick me out. I'm just going that's all."

But there are difficulties. The number of ex-service persons is only beginning. Everybody else who wants to go would be welcome to go, and among them is Carlyle's audacious suggestion that Britain's "idle navy ships" should be used for that purpose. They would be a transport service which would be a transport service should be put into force again.

Even The Morning Post, whose attitude can't be described as exact, comes out with a proposal for "financial assistance for emigration."

Brain and Brawn

Wear and tear of brain and muscle uses up nerve force and energy and often results in a seriously run-down state of health.

Brain and brawn (muscle) both derive their nourishment and force from the blood.

One of the most important ingredients of the blood is IRON. A weakened, anemic condition of the system is frequently due to lack of iron in the blood.

A valuable reconstructive tonic for brain workers and muscle workers, who suffer from overwork, is ZIRON Iron Tonic. Ziron contains pure, soluble iron salts and other valuable

A PROGRESSIVE, OR

A STAGNANT POLICY?

Settlement of the question as to whether or not Atlanta is going to expand, and meet its civic obligations, depends absolutely upon whether or not the city is going to take advantage of its bonding possibilities to enable it to do the essential things that cannot possibly be done by any other means.

Reduced to its last analysis, it is a question of progress or stag-nation!

City Comptroller West, upon being asked by The Constitution for an official statement as to the amount of bonds the city can legally issue, gives the astounding information that twelve millions of dollars in municipal bonds could be issued without exceeding the constitutional limit.

The total outstanding bonded indebtedness of Atlanta, with not a dollar against the county, is only four millions of dollars—the smallest bonded indebtedness, perhaps, of any city of Atlanta's size in the United States.

A $5,000,000 bond issue, which would be less than one-half of what the city is constitutionally authorized to issue, would cost, including sinking fund deposits and interest, only about $400,000

a year—certainly not an insurmountable obstacle to a city of Atlanta's resources and splendid credit.

A few years ago the city of Los Angeles, needing an up-to-date waterworks system, bonded itself for $30,000,000 to get it!

Thriving cities of the west, such as Seattle, Portland, Tacoma,

Spokane, Salt Lake, Denver, keep bonded up to their constitutional limitation that they may supply what their people have a right to expect—and that they may steadily develop as progressive municipalities.

That is one reason why western cities grow so fast.

Some American cities do not even require a vote of the people on bond issue proposals, but city administrations are by law authorized to incur bonded indebtedness, the only restriction being that such indebtedness shall not exceed a fixed constitutional limitation.

Greater New York is a conspicuous example.

No city, no more than a business, can expand without building on its credit, and the city that refuses to do so condemns itself to stagnation!

It is inconceivable that Atlanta, with the legal right to issue additional bonds aggregating $12,000,- 000, and confronted with the glaring fact that it is woefully and de-clarably behind in every branch of municipal service—not through any fault of its administrative authorities, past or present, but solely on account of its long-standing miserly fiscal policy—will longer refuse to take advantage of its bonding opportunities.

The Constitution has repeatedly urged that something of this kind be started; not necessarily with the idea of doing it now, but simily that time may be saved by getting the preliminaries out of the way, so that later on, when we are ready to move on, the city will not have to wait a year or so before starting actual operations.

Most departments of the city service are overcrowded, and scarcely one of them is adequate to meet the needs of a city the size of Atlanta, much less those of a great municipality that is going to double its population within the next few decades.

Our school buildings are a disgrace to the city.

Atlanta cannot meet its civic requirements without utilization of its credit!

It is impossible for it to do so on current income. It means stagnation to try to do so.

Now is the psychological time for Atlanta to launch a new expansion policy.

Labor must be provided for those out of work, and they could be used to no better advantage for themselves or for the city, than in building a bigger and a better city.

We realize fully that it would be futile to start a movement of this sort without the hearty sympathy and co-operation of the city administration.

If that is not obtainable the idea might as well be abandoned, for any considerable element of opposition could kill the movement, which to be successful, must have the united support of all interests.

Something must be done to take away the pressure that is holding the city back and that will permit it to develop as it should.

Consequently, they watched the American presidential election returns with eager interest, and when it became apparent that Harding had won consternation gripped them, for they saw the doughboys' departure and profits taking wing.

But the Coblenz do not understand American politics, nor the ways of American politicians.

They should be reminded that Harding was on the stump, appealing to American prejudice and bidding for the votes of American wives, mothers and sweethearts

when he said that he was for bringing the boys home instanter.

At the same time he was saying that he was for staying out of the league of nations.

He had his fingers crossed in an instant; for he does not intend to keep America out of the league of nations, no more does he intend to bring the boys back from the Rhine until the last condition of the armistice is complied with.

There is too much calamity howling; too little attention paid to existing conditions, and too much gloom expressed in forecasts of the future.

Rapallo Settlement Great Aid to World Peace

Italy and Jugo-Slavia Conferences Adjusted Whole Adriatic Status

Latin Nation Acquires Defensive Crest of Alps From Switzerland to Quarnero, Also Fiume and Protecting Islands, While Slavs Fall Heir to All Dalmatia Save Zara—Agreement Is Far-Reaching

By FRANK H. SIMONDS.

New York, November 20.—(Special).—The first, obvious and wholly satisfactory thing to be said about the Adriatic settlement which has resulted from the Rapallo conferences between the Italians and the Jugo-Slavs is that it is a real settlement, visible in itself and bound to have a very wide and beneficial influence upon all of the existing European situation. The second circumstance, only less significant is that the settlement avoids all the pitfalls and dangers of the League of Nations. In a word, we have to deal neither with a Danzig solution, the fatal weakness of which was disclosed in the crisis of the recent Russo-Polish war nor with a Sarre Basin adjustment, which amounts only to postponing for fifteen years all actual solution and at the same time keeping alive all the causes of strife.

In the Rapallo conference both Italy and Jugo-Slavia have shown surprising moderation. The victory, if victory there be in the solution, is found not so much in the fact that the Italians have succeeded in saving Fiume from Slav rule and league of nations compunction, but rather in the fact that while preserving the way for ultimate annexation of Fiume and fixing their northern frontier at last upon the crest of the Alps from Switzerland to the Quarnero, Italy has, at the same time left the door open for that friendly relation between Slav and Latin which was the dream of Mazzini.

It is idle now to go back over all the long and troubled history of the Adriatic question in detail, yet one must glance backward for the moment only to see the future more precisely significant of the Rapallo agreement. At Paris Italy presented to the allied nations, to Great Britain and France, that contract, which was the treaty of London in 1919, by the terms of which Italy agreed to enter the war on the Anglo-French-Russian side, while those two great powers agreed that they would give certain profits from the expected victory. Chief among these profits was a frontier following the crest of the Alps from Switzerland to the Adriatic, and in addition the northern part of the province of Dalmatia.

ITALY'S POSITION ILLLOGICAL.

For reasons explicable by reference to his fourteen points, President Wilson promptly vetoed this basis of settlement, and at the same time, as a gesture of honor, Italy's additional request that she be permitted to acquire Fiume, excepted from the treaty of London, but unfortunately Italy, in population and in the number of its adherents, was far from being entitled to an application of Mr. Wilson's principle of self-determination. Italy's position, however, was obviously illogical, in that she had agreed to the terms of the treaty of London, which did violence to the principle of self-determination, conspicuously in the case of Dalmatia, while in the matter of Fiume she invoked this same principle.

Actua, the treaty of London had assigned to the Italians not only the lower valleys of the Trentino, but also the considerable German population in the upper valleys, including the towns of Bolzen, Merano, and Bressanone. In the same way Italy had similarly assigned to, Italy very large Slav populations in all the regions between the eastern shore of the Adriatic and the crest of the Julian Alps. Finally, the population of the half of Dalmatia assigned to Italy was overwhelmingly Slav.

Italy asked for the crest of the Alps as a defensive rampart, a wall against the Teutonic world. And for some odd reason Mr. Wilson did once ignore his principle of self-determination and agreed that the Italians should annex a quarter of a million Germans. But when Italy asked for the defense of the roads and islands as protection against a Slav menace and demanded Fiume on the basis of the principle of self-determination, President Wilson balked. Unfortunately this dispute came at a critical moment in Paris and Mr. Wilson regarded it as a test of the success of his great peace program. He was also misled by the enthusiasm with which he had recently been received in Italy and convinced that the Italian people would listen to him rather than to the statesmen who represented Italy at Paris.

ADRIATIC QUESTION POISONOUS.

As a consequence there emerged Mr. Wilson's amazing appeal to the

They were prepared, even against the veto of President Wilson, to support the Italian claims to the northern half of Dalmatia. But on the other hand, they were unwilling to antagonize President Wilson by accepting the Italian claims to the Fiume dispute. By the declaration of London, Fiume had been left outside the Italian area, if Italy presented for the Italian people this agreement, she must abandon Fiume.

As for Italy, she could not abandon Fiume both because it was an Italian town and because first Gliotti politically and then D'Annunzio violently had raised the issue and brought in the element of national honor. To abandon this fragment of Italian soil would be to live, to be subdued by Jugo-Slav troops and submerged by a Slavonic invasion which could do and live. A domestic revolution was bound to follow any such yielding.

GROWTH OF DOMESTIC UNREST.

There was still a fourth consideration. Accepting the powerful assistance and championship of President Wilson as a guarantee of American military aid, if necessary, the Jugo-Slavs not only refused all Italian offers but resolutely declined all Anglo-French proffers, which, while reducing the Jugo-Slav claims, would not have been acceptable to the Jugo-Slavs all that they could hope for and as much as they have actually obtained under the Rapallo settlement.

In the meantime, there was steadily the possibility of war and an enduring strain upon the resources of both nations directly concerned. Italy could not demobilize, her finances terribly strained by a protraction of the war, unless she had substantial support to protect her to a new burden. Domestic unrest grew with alarming rapidity. The Jugo-Slavs, on their side, were compelled to settle for settlement and all proposals made by the British and the French with the idea of coming to this dangerous situation.

These proposals did not assure to Jugo-Slavs the maximum of benefit which would flow from the rigid application of the Wilsonian principle. Moreover, the situation was further complicated by the daring seizure of Fiume by D'Annunzio, the leader of the Italian delegation, in the name of the Italian majority in Fiume, the sole economic outlet of the new Slav state upon the open sea.

The consequence has been that the whole Adriatic question has poisoned the whole European situation for more than a year and a half. Since France and Britain in the main supported President Wilson, Italian resentment has been directed against the Jugo-Slavs in accordance with the terms of the international agreement which had been murdered by Italian soldiers. Moreover, the Jugo-Slav towns of the United States have reached almost unprecedented limits, as anyone who was in Italy in 1919 can testify.

In truth, the Adriatic dispute has served to demolish the alliance which conquered Germany. Between France and Italy there has sprung up an animosity which is exceeding that between France and Germany before 1914. France, seeking to build up a central European barrier to later German expansion, has been compelled to turn its aspirations to minimize southern Slav importance. In all the international conferences France has been the chief spokesman, and has been the most uncompromisingly opposed to the Jugo-Slavs, and has even been murdered by Italian soldiers. Moreover, the Jugo-Slav towns of the United States have reached almost unprecedented limits, as anyone who was in Italy in 1919 can testify.

EXCITED HOPES OF SLAVS.

And in this connection it is essential to perceive the exact effect of the president's intervention.

Unmistakably the Jugo-Slav government under pressure from the European powers would in the spring of 1919 have accepted the settlement of Rapallo, as it was available but for the fact that the whole of the Slav population was satisfied that President Wilson should be able to make a better thing, but it has at all times been inevitable.

Whether she will be able to find a new port in the probable future, there is no doubt that she will have to concede to the Italians and more valuable Slav territories, and more valuable to the Italians.

The frontier with the Italians becomes from a geographical and military point of view satisfactory.

President Wilson's proposal has been rejected by the Italians, and the Jugo-Slavs encouraged by the support of the American president having similarly pushed aside all proposals made by the British and the French. It became clear at last that there could be no settlement, and that the Wilsonian idea of a settlement was established in the Slav mind that President Wilson should be unable to employ American military or economic force to make a permanent peace.

President Wilson's intervention did not contribute to a fairer or more enduring settlement in the end. It only postponed all settlement for more than a year and a half, excited hopes among the Slavs which were to be realized, unless American soldiers and ships were to be employed to coerce the Italians and American financial resources to be used to make the Italian majority in Fiume submit. It may have been compelled, she never could be persuaded to accept the Wilsonian program. Agreeing that all the conditions proposed by the president's contention were correct, they could not be established save by force. When the elements of the Wilsonian program, as a consequence of the president's loss of control at home, Europe proceeded to a transactional settlement, confirming the settlement which it would have made at Paris, had the president not intervened. The agreement of Rapallo is the first, but by no means the last, evidence we shall have that the Europeans have read the election returns of November 2.

DEFENSIVE FRONTIER.

Now as to the settlement itself, there is just this to be said: By it Italy acquires outright the crests of the Alps all the way from Switzerland to the Quarnero. This is the strategic frontier. This is the military point of view that any Italian could accept. But there is no more reason that Italy should have this strategic barrier than that France should have the Rhine in acquiring this frontier Italy annexes some 750,000 Slavs and Germans, a far larger alien population than France would have taken had she decided to annex the Sarre basin outright.

In addition Italy establishes the latinity of Fiume. It is independent now, but its independence is a pure fiction, it can and will in due course of time unite with Italy and this is understood by all parties concerned in the agreement of Rapallo.

HOUSING PROBLEM NEEDS ATTENTION

Future Growth of Atlanta Depends Upon Better Housing Conditions in Opinion of Realty Men.

BY BENJAMIN D. WATKINS.

President Benjamin D. Watkins Co.

The "For Rent" sign in most of our cities is rapidly taking its place with the Dodo bird and other extinct features of the bygone ages, and with the departure of the "For Rent" sign, comes over-crowded conditions, elements of the evils of bad houses and industrial unrest. Every thoughtful employer knows these conditions spell costly labor, reduced efficiency and increased overhead charges. Production necessarily is shortened and a train of industrial evils follows.

In former years the question of housing received little attention from the employers and manufacturers, it being taken for granted that these matters were easily adjusted by the government. In recent years have been active in getting new industries, but have given little heed to housing the hundreds of workers needed during the growth of the community. It was a very natural oversight because, as stated above, this was left with the individual worker until the war, met with rather easy solution.

However, the war of four years disturbed industrial and social conditions that the housing problem was not so easily adjusted. There was such a cutting down of construction from 1914 to November of 1918, construction was over 50 per cent of that in 1914. It was estimated by the department of labor that the United States was short more than a million houses. Just how much these need has decreased or increased is difficult to determine at this time, but from general indications, it is reasonable to believe that the number of homes has increased since this estimate of the department of labor.

This widespread lack of homes, in many communities, have advanced from $50 to 100 per cent in the last year, with every indication of a further increase. These high prices have given an impetus to building, but not such impetus as should be given, and will have to be given for the good of the country. The demand over the country has become so imperative that it can no longer be left to individual effort, but should be made by the community or cooperative enterprise.

The great demand for homes comes from individuals and in most instances from employees who have not sufficient funds to accumulate to finance building. Their incomes are sufficient to meet the interest on investment, and also the monthly payment on the principal if they can be stretched over a long enough period. High wages make this easy.

Quick Action Needed.

Any means of aid for this class of people should be home owners should not wait until maturity to get a home on credit. They are able to pay for a home, and are willing to pay, and the only thing necessary is to wait until the time comes when that will permit them to obtain a home on credit. There can be no doubt that these people will be of great service to the community and social value to their homes. Home owners are as a class, better citizens and less apt to be a source of unrest, and therefore are often better workers and employees. Without proper attention to this problem, growing cities are finding themselves so cramped that many industries are forced to move, and to curb their normal expansion, or make some provision to extend their ownership.

This is the new idea recently developed and put in every-day practice by the L. W. Rogers company in connection with its 120 stores scattered in all parts of Atlanta and throughout the southern and central Georgia. It is a noteworthy feat in retail merchandising, and one that should arouse interest in all progressive trade circles over the country.

This plan has been made possible through a special "sample" show window in the window of the Rogers company in Atlanta. This room contains windows especially patterned after the regular Rogers show windows, and a special staff of artists and helpers have been trained to make the windows look like the windows in their homes.

When the company officials decide to make a certain product the feature of the window display, a certain time the idea is turned over to those employed in the "sample show-window" room. These artists then set their heads and hands to work to make the windows a permanent collection of merchandise around a central group of brooms, cans of syrup, sacks of flour, or whatever may be featured.

With delayed buying on the part of many merchants during the past few weeks, no time was wasted in getting at the meat in the meat counter when a quick order for holiday goods is wanted. And it is quick order, with the result that the merchant can get a good profit.

Standardizing Show Windows An Atlanta Idea

Chain Stores Adopt New Method for Getting Best Results From Window Display.

BY CHADDOCK GOINS.

Editor of New South Baker.

One show window for one hundred and twenty stores would seem slightly insufficient in these days of intensive merchandising, but if that could be multiplied one hundred and twenty times, thus giving each store the same window display—such an arrangement would seem to be both sufficient and satisfying.

Beat Bigamy Charge Of Two Husbands, But Admitted Having Four

New York, November 20.—Mrs. Annie Levine, 40 years old, beat a bigamy charge in the court of general sessions, claiming she didn't have two husbands, as charged, but four. She was rearrested, accused of having an even half dozen spouses and held in $500 bail.

The district attorney charged that she married Harry Baker, a cloth finisher, last July, not being divorced from Max Feigenbaum, a wealthy Cleveland baker, whom she wed in 1915. But to prove that she wasn't legally married to Feigenbaum, she took the stand and told the court she had married one in 1905 and another in 1906, having borne three children by the first husband, from whom she said she obtained a "Jewish divorce."

BY ROBERT J. BENDER, United News Staff Correspondent.

New York, November 20.—The first test of strength between the two elements seeking to gain control within the republican party will come with Senator Harding's appointment of a secretary of state.

All the persuasive influences of the one which may be termed the "Hoover group," because Herbert Hoover is now and promises to become increasingly its dominant figure, are directed against the appointment of the premier portfolio in Harding's cabinet of any irreconcilable or any man who would favor rejection of the Versailles league even as a basis for entrance into the present association of nations.

Equal persuasion is being brought to bear by what might be termed the "anti-league group" (although a great number of these have been reservationists on the league issue), for the appointment of a secretary of state, preferably a senator who has shown enthusiasm in the campaign.

The "Hoover group," supported by some of the foremost pro-league newspapers in the east—among them newspapers which advocated the election of Governor Cox—wishes Ellsworth Root or Charles Evans Hughes at the head of the cabinet, even if either were to remain only until our foreign policy were effected.

The "anti-leaguers," including the irreconcilables as well as many of the heretofore reservationists, wish Senator Philander G. Knox or Henry Cabot Lodge, even if either were to retire from office because of ill health or age, immediately after the peace foundation were erected.

In "Tales With Knox,"

President Harding's cabinet on his secretary of state, both groups are preparing for battle.

As things stand today, it is certain

Harding's position would appear to be more in tune with that of Knox, for instance, than with that of Root or Hoover. Harding's discussion of his foreign policy in his speech of acceptance led us at the time to point out his notable alignment with the league position of Senator Knox, offered by the latter in a speech during the treaty debate.

Peace first and, later, an entirely new league plan, based upon a world court and a revision of international laws, was the idea advanced by Knox and apparently concurred in by Harding in the latter's speech of acceptance.

Since then, Harding has consistently veered more strongly toward Knox than he has toward Root or Hoover. For three reasons, he is regarded by republican leaders as likely to be Harding's first choice for secretary of state.

His league position, while satisfactory to the irreconcilables, has been more constructive, and in being constructive he has advocated a course apparently in line with Harding's own views toward the league.

He is a former secretary of state, and knows the game of diplomacy from beginning to end. His appointment to the cabinet would leave a vacancy which would permit Governor Sprout of Pennsylvania, to step into the senate, a move Sprout aspires to as a growing figure in that state.

The irreconcilables.

The further support for Knox rests in Harding's desire to draw upon the senate for cabinet advisors, that he may work easily with the upper branch. The only obstacle in his path to that end is the so-called Johnson group of irreconcilables, all of whom are either intimate with, as in the case of Johnson—or very friendly to Knox.

Knox, however, is far from strong physically. He has been indisposed and at times quite ill for some months. This might prevent his acceptance of the post. In addition, as one favoring rejection of the league of nations in virtually all of its present phases, and with the voting record of an irreconcilable, he would have difficulty in winning over the Wilson-Cox democrats in the senate, who might be needed for a two-thirds vote to ratify a treaty.

Senator Lodge is offered as a second choice of Harding by republicans, but Lodge, owing to the democratic bitterness against him at the outset, might have even more trouble working for a two-thirds majority than Knox. Lodge probably would be acceptable to the pro-league group, because during the campaign he took a vastly more extreme position against the treaty than he did in his Senate vote.

Challenge to Hoover Group.

Appointment of either Knox or Lodge would certainly be distinctly distasteful and probably regarded as a challenge to the Hoover group, which has begun its drive for support of Ellsworth Root, supported by some of the foremost pro-league newspapers of the east, including

The New York Evening Post. Followed by an inaugural address in which Harding supported the Knox plan as opposed to the Root-Hoover plan, it would mean a fight certainly.

At present Hoover may be said to represent the strongest group in the party. But Hoover is an organization with no small following. Already he is being looked to for construction of a program of labor as events within the next two weeks will show, and the writer is ready to Hoover's speech in Indianapolis, October 9, for a clue as to his future position. If a fight developed between the two faiths within the G. O. P. The development of his line of thought may be registered in the following paragraphs taken from that speech.

Plan for the League.

"The essential thing is that the republican party has pledged itself by platform, by the action of its majority, to the secret of the fundamental principles of the League of Nations, that they undertake the fundamental mission to put into living being the principles of an organization of nations for the preservation of peace. The carrying out of that promise is the test of the entire party, and the ultimate membership of the republican party.

Then, further on:

"I do not believe it is the party which is to blame. I do not believe it is the moment. If by any chance it should fail . . . it will have destroyed the confidence of our people in the League of Nations, and will project us into the dangerous path of party alignment."

"If it fails to provide peace on terms which establish organized international association to prevent war; if it fails to attain it by methods which secure the good will of the world, then it will be the same penalty for that failure which we demand should be paid by the democratic party."

Sir Auckland Geddes, the British ambassador, declared tonight in an address before the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York.

"There are only two possible paths before each nation at a time of world change like this," the ambassador said. "It can co-operate with its fellows and, maintaining peace and fellowship between itself and them, devote its energies to the solution of its internal problems. Alternatively, it can follow the path and the isolation of national activity more truly impossible."

"The world awaits for an answer to the question, 'Are the British-American contracts to be fair and just, or are they given to the world to mark by suspicion, political jealousies, and scheming to establish exclusive economic spheres?'" the ambassador said.

Asserting that inventiveness was continually reducing the time-scales which the world could not solve, the am-

THANKSGIVING DAY

Three Hundred Years Ago and Now

By CLIVE MARSHALL

THE three hundredth anniversary of the landing of the Pilgrims gives a peculiar interest to this year's recognition of Thanksgiving Day.

It was not until the year after their coming that the Pilgrims observed their first Thanksgiving, so that the Tercentenary of that first observance falls next year. But this year marks the three hundredth return of the date which sentiment fixes as a profoundly significant point in the history of America.

The Pilgrims came with high hopes, yet certainly with no deep illusions as to the obstacles. They faced great odds. They had terms to make with nature and with the red men. They suffered much, used their guns and worked out on hard lines the precarious processes of a primitive life. They went to their meeting house in peril of the Indians. That was a shadow that hung over all their affairs. And when a year had gone by they felt the wish to express their gratitude. They gave thanks to God for their crops and so much of their safety as fell to them. Their gratefulness was for simple things.

Today we give thanks again. We do not think in the same simple terms. The message of a President may allude as always to the bounty of the ground. What we owe to nature and the farmer may shine through the expressions of national thanks. But life is overlaid by so vast a complication that comparison with the first Thanksgiving strikes us strangely. For one thing, the intensely religious cast of the first Thanksgiving glows mightily in the comparison. Not only was the religion as well as the life of the Puritans simpler than the life and the religion of their successors, but Puritan sentiment was more keenly centred on elemental ideas. They had elemental ideas to deal with. The briefest thought of that day will remind us of how many things the Puritans did not have to consider, of the number of detailed issues that did not distract them.

Yet Thanksgiving today, translated into such different terms, means pretty much the same things. Gratefulness for what we have means what it meant to the Puritan, even if we can't see a cornfield from our window—even if the telephone interrupts the thought, and the snort of a horn announces that the buzz wagon is at the door. Our perils are not so easily seen or felt, but humanity still has perils, for escape from which it may still be grateful, if it has the spirit of gratefulness. The Puritan did not know of a coal shortage, but he knew what food shortage meant. He did not dream of a Great War in terms of millions, but he knew what a half-dozen arrows could mean. A score of dead represented a devastating loss. Life is writ larger now, but it is life just the same. Birth, struggle, love, death—all these are not changed in heart value by the mere bigness of modern life.

To remember this to get something worth while from a backward look at the Pilgrims. If we fancy Miss 1920 sitting down to Thanksgiving dinner with Miss 1620 we shall see that time has not greatly changed human instincts, if it has so greatly changed the expression of these instincts. Miss 1620 really prayed. She may have had a hard religion, but it was one that gazed directly toward a divine providence. Miss 1920 is likely to omit the prayer. But it would not do to assume that she has lost the sentiment because she has so often dropped the form. The sentiment is vastly overlaid by changed conditions of life—and by the diversity of life.

The Puritans, indeed, were a compact group, animated by great singleness of religious and social sentiment. Forms could be direct and specific because all had agreed upon those forms. The country to which the Puritans came no longer has a single formula. It now represents so many peoples, so many creeds, so many habits of life, so many highly differentiated pursuits, that expression naturally loses uniformity. Because uniformity has disappeared there is always danger of assuming that the feelings behind uniformity have disappeared also.

One fact of profound significance stands out. America today has greater bounty and greater security than at any time before. The world freely speaks of "the largest and strongest nation." No philosopher needs to point out that this great fact carries its obligation. The people who established Thanksgiving Day had little bounty and many dangers in proportion to their strength as a people. We still have to measure bounties. We still face dangers. But we do these things with a consciousness of tremendous national strength. If the weak can be grateful the strong have greater reason. In thousands of pulpits this will be today's text of appeal.

Good Form, Health and Beauty

LOSE POUNDS BY EATING

By Mrs. HENRY SYMES

WE HAVE all heard about people who eat to live and other people who live to eat, but not so many of us know about the people who eat to get thin. Oh, yes; they do just that, and quite successfully, too.

Are you burdened with an extra twenty or thirty pounds which you would just love to lose? Perhaps you have tried, without success, all sorts of ways to become thin and have decided that there is no use trying to do anything else but the jolly, fat person nature intends you to be. It is so easy for fat people to blame their fatness on nature, isn't it?

Right there you are making a mistake. Nature never intends that you should be fat and unbeautiful. On the contrary, she is quite ready and willing to help you reduce, if you will do your part. It is you yourself who are responsible for the extra pounds, because you do not know how to eat. It is not necessary to turn yourself into a second MacSweeney and try to starve to death; but it is necessary to know how to choose your foods.

The reason why most people are impatient of a diet is because they are uncomfortable while they are dieting. The meals which they take do not satisfy their hunger and consequently they become discouraged and soon they are back in the old rut.

Since the satisfaction of the feeling of hunger does not depend upon the nutritive value of the food, but rather upon weight and bulk, the logical thing to do is to eat that food which affords considerable bulk and a low calorie or nourishing value.

The fat person should fill his or her stomach without supplying it with unnecessary.

due quantities of nourishment. Make abundant use of such "filling" but not fattening foods as radishes, cucumbers, celery, lettuce, and varieties of green salads. Of course, you understand that this food is to be prepared with but little oil, fats, etc.

Fruits are a most valuable aid in reducing, since their nutritive value is very low. Their sugar content is 7 per cent or less. So eat all you want of apples, berries, currants and strawberries. Grapes contain about 15 per cent sugar, so you must not indulge too often in them. Pears, plums, cherries and oranges should be taken in moderate amounts.

Surely you will not starve or feel at all uncomfortable if you choose your diet from the list of foods given below:

Oysters, lobsters, frog legs, clams, scallops, any kind without flour or fat thickening.

Fish—Fresh, salt or smoked of any kind cooked without fat or butter.

Game—Poultry, chicken, duck, turkey, etc.

Vegetables—Tomatoes, turnips, squash, carrots, string beans, onions, cabbage, parsnips, carrots, parsnips, radishes, salade, etc., watercress, pickles of any sort.

Bread made of graham.

Coffee and tea. Water in any quantity should be taken except with meals.

Milk sparingly and liquors very moderately.

If you can omit breakfast, do so. Get into the habit of eating an early lunch and you will find that two meals a day are sufficient for your needs. If you feel that you must have something for breakfast, take a glass of skimmed milk, buttermilk, coffee, or substitute, without cream or sugar.

Remembering these rules, enjoy your Thanksgiving dinner!

ANSWERS TO BEAUTY QUERIES

Beauty and health helps are free to every one. If you want a prompt reply, be sure to inclose a stamped, addressed envelope. Once a week your query will be mailed to you and will be answered thru the column. All letters are absolutely confidential.

Miscellaneous Queries

Q. I am 11 years old, 5 feet 1 inch tall and weigh 109 pounds. Is that the proper weight? I have freckles, pimples and blackheads. Can you give me remedies which will take them away? My hair is very poor. Do you think waving it makes it that way? How can I make it thick and long? Is there any way to keep it from becoming darker? How can I make my eyelashes long?—Brown Eyes.

A. The correct weight for your height and age is 104 pounds. If you would have your face free from pimples and blackheads, then you should keep the pores of your skin free from dust and dirt by means of a daily bath. Bathe your face every night with warm water and a good soap, and rinse it very thoroughly with cold water. You should be careful also of your diet. Do not eat too heavy or rich food and not too many sweets. Sweets, you know, are a most potent cause of blackheads. Drink at least eight glasses of water each day, but none with meals, and take plenty of exercise in the open air. The formulas I have printed below will aid in getting rid of the pimples and blackheads, already have.

Blackheads of the Skin

Extract of aloet 10 drops
Sweat glands 1/2 drops
Sulphur precipitate 2 ounces
Lavender 1/2 drops
Olive oil 2 scruples

Use with friction twice a day on the skin affected.

Freckle Cream

Perfume 1 ounce
Laudanum (anhydrous) 1/2 ounce
Oil 1/2 ounce
Acetic acid 2 drops
Curd 1/2 ounce

Curling the hair with a hot iron or pattern curlers has a tendency to make it become brittle and break off. If you will take good care of your hair, brush it thoroughly at night and give it the proper amount of shampoo, you will find that it will gain a natural life and luster of its own and will not need to digest, curl and comb. Avoid foods that materially everything you eat. Give up pickles, vinegar and all such articles. Freely use the open air and take plenty of sleep. Don't fret or worry, as this will only encourage an easy-going disposition if you possibly can.

To Reduce a Double Chin

Q. I am slightly over weight, and this shows especially in my face. To be exact, I have a double chin. Are there any exercises or massage movements which I may use to get rid of it?—Trude.

A. Below you will find a system of massage which is very disengaging to a double chin:

To Reduce a Double Chin

To reduce a double chin, massage daily, using the following movements: From point of chin, move the hand down and forward, drawing the head backward at the same time. Bathe the chin and throat frequently with cold water.

Falling Hair

Q. Will you please print a remedy for falling hair?—Brown Eyes.

A. At the short time you will notice a great improvement in the condition of your hair.

For Falling Hair

Cologne 3 ounces
Tincture of camphor 1/2 ounce
Oil of English lavender 1/2 ounce
Oil of rosemary 1/2 ounce

Apply the oil to the hair once or twice a day. It is positively necessary that the scalp should be kept clean. Shampoo at least once a week.

TROTZKY'S DEFENSE OF RED TERRORISM

Lurid Light Throw on Fanatical Aims of Extremists by Exclusive Statement from Co-Dictator of Russia

Rule of Blood and Fire Upheld by War Minister

There Is No Half-Way House for Socialism, Declares Trotzky, Who Claims Militant Communism Has Right to Overturn Capitalistic Government by Every Means in Its Power.

The Atlanta Constitution publishes herewith an article written by Leo Trotzky, which it has just received through The New York Herald from a correspondent in Europe. This article was written in the Kremlin only a few weeks ago. It is a revelation of the processes of thought of Russia's dominant mind. Trotzky fights for his visionary aims with something akin to fanaticism. What he has to say is of interest and of value—of value because it will enable the reader to understand the kind of man who is trying to drive Russia.

Terrorism from its inspirational fountainhead is defended and explained in the sensational statement by Leo Trotzky which follows. The co-dictator of Russia, who shares with Lenin absolute power over millions of hapless human beings, was stirred to issue this doctrinal defense of the bolshevist policy because of the widely circulated book, "Terrorism and Communism," written by Carl Kautsky, one of the leading Marxian socialists writers of Germany. The article from the pen of the bolshevist minister of war was passed out of Russia presumably with his cognizance through Riga a few weeks ago. It is the first full statement of the red government to appear in many months and it throws a lurid light upon the fanatical character of the ferocious extremists who have classed liberals, radicals, socialists, bourgeoisie, capitalists and royalty as one.

It is first presented to the English speaking public through The Atlanta Constitution and The New York Herald.

This statement of Trotzky's proves conclusively there can be no halfway house in socialism. It shows that Kerensky's government was in an illogical position when it faced that attack of a militant communism. The practical elimination of the intelligencia of Russia under a bolshevist rule by death, exile or voluntary migration proves that no matter what social reform ideas they may have had they count for nothing once the dictatorship of the proletariat holds sway.

Reasoning of the bolshevist leader is wholly deadly in his attack on the elements opposed to his ideas. But his statement contains the fatal defects of failing to realize that it is not human nature to push logic to the extreme conclusion. His assertion that "two parties in a country will never decide the question of who is to rule by referring to paragraph this or that of the constitution, but by the use of every form of violence," is the weakest point in his chain of reasoning. Ordinary life proves that men and women are continually compromising; otherwise all social or married life would be an impossibility.

What might be termed "war neurosis" dominates Trotzky's statement throughout. The extremely violent passages that appear unexpectedly throw a spotlight of red on the dictator's terrible mind and convey to the thinking person unmitigated horror and alarm.

Riga, October 15, 1920.

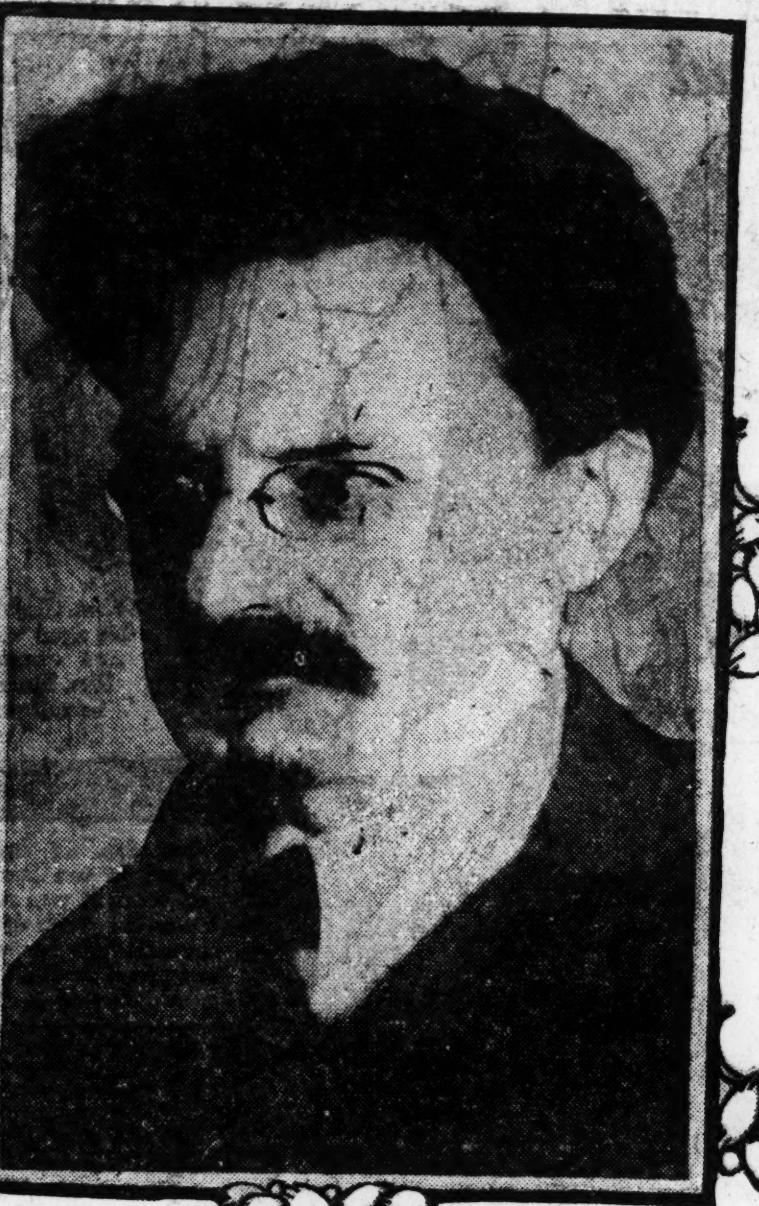

The first full statement in many months to reach the outer world has just arrived here from Moscow. It is signed by Leo Trotzky, co-dictator with Lenin. It apparently was inspired by the attack on bolshevism published in Germany recently for the introductory paragraph says:

"The great charge made against the bolshevists in America and some of the British labor leaders with whom I have recently spoken in Russia is that they practice terrorism, but I shall only consider that charge insofar as it is advanced, not by capitalists or by capitalistic newspapers, but by socialists. The most prominent socialist who has advanced it so far is the well-known German communist writer, Carl Kautsky. In answering Kautsky I shall at the same time answer the objections of some American and English publicists, making use of arguments which I have already used in Russian bolshevik publications, which are not likely, however, to be found either in England or America."

The initial seizure of power by the soviets in the beginning of November, 1917, went off, as it were, by itself, with infinitesimal loss of life. The Russian bourgeoisie set themselves so estranged from the mass of the people, so destitute of internal strength, so compromised by the course and the outcome of the war, so demoralized by the Kerensky regime, that they hardly plucked up the courage for any resistance.

In Petrograd Kerensky's rule was overthrown almost without any fighting at all. In Moscow the resistance was more prolonged, chiefly because of the lack of resolution which marked our own action. In most of the provincial towns power was transferred to the soviets on the mere re-plans drawn up by the British naval agents and with the help of British warships and aviators.

The reign of Kolchak, the protege of the American stock exchange, owed its origin to the foreign Czechoslovak corps, financed by the French government. Kaledin, and Krasnov who had been set free by us, were the first leaders of the Don counter-revolution, and owed their partial successes only to the open military and financial support of Germany.

Upholds Resort to Any Means to Retain Their Power.

If the matter had ended there, the red terror would never have even been mentioned because it would never have come into existence. But November, 1917, was already a witness to the nascent resistance of the propertied classes. It is true, however, that the interference of the imperialistic states of the west was required to give the Russian counter-revolution faith in itself, and to lend strength. This can be shown, in both great and little facts, from day to day, throughout the whole period of the soviet revolution.

Feeling itself without any support among the soldiers, Kerensky's general staff was inclined to recognize without resistance the soviet government, which had already begun negotiations with the Germans for an armistice. But then came the protests of the entente military missions, accompanied by open threats. The staff became frightened. Edged on by allied officers, it started on the path of resistance. This led to armed conflict and to the killing of General Dukhnikov, the chief of staff, by a group of revolutionary sailors.

Blames Entente Officers for Resistance by the Officer Cadets.

In Petrograd the official agents of the entente, especially the French military mission, hand in hand with the soviet revolutionaries and the Mensheviks, began openly to organize resistance from the second day of the soviet coup d'état, by mobilizing, arming and inciting to attack us, the officer-cadets and the bourgeois youth generally.

This rising of these cadets on November 10 was the cause of a hundred times more victims than the coup d'état of November 7. The reckless march of Kerensky and Krasnov on Petrograd, also provoked by the entente, naturally infused the first elements of bitterness into the struggle. Nevertheless, General Krasnov was set at liberty on his word of honor. The Yaroslav rising, which cost many victims, was organized by Savinkov at the orders of the French embassy and at the embassy's expense. Archangel was seized according to

"But how then are your tactics different from the tactics of Czarism?" cry the priests of liberalism and kautskyanism.

You don't understand how, holy ones? We will explain it to you. The terror of Czarism was directed against the proletariat. The czar's gendarmerie strangled the workers, who were struggling for a socialist order of things. Our extraordinary commissions shoot land owners, capitalists, generals, who are trying to restore the capitalist order of things. You grasp the nuance? Yes? For us, communists, it is quite enough.

about the relativity of truth with those who are just now "criticizing" us with the aid of every kind of lethal weapon. Furthermore, our object is not to punish liars and encourage the speakers of truth in the press of all shades, but to crush the class lie of the bourgeoisie and secure the triumph of the class truth of the proletariat—irrespective of the fact that there are both fanatics and liars in both camps.

Contempt for the Press of the United States and France.

The press is a trusty weapon against corruption. This liberal recipe sounds particularly pitiful at the Kolchak's army was founded by social-revolutionaries (what charlatanism that name sounds now!) and supported by mensheviks. They and others were at war with us for a year and a half on the north in front. The menshevik rulers of the Caucasus, formerly the allies of the Hohenzollerns, now the allies of Lloyd-George, arrested and shot bolsheviks with as much readiness as German and British officers would have done.

The mensheviks and social-revolutionaries of the Kuban Rada founded the army of Denikin. The mensheviks in the Estonian coalition government took direct part in Yudenich's last advance on Petrograd. That's what these "currents" in socialism look like.

If the quarrel with the social revolutionaries and mensheviks could be settled as a matter of convictions and voting—that is, if Russian and foreign imperialists were not standing behind them—there never would have been a civil war.

The bourgeoisie itself attained power by means of risings, and consolidated that power through civil war. During time of peace it keeps power in the hands by means of a complicated system of repression. As there exists a class society founded on the deepest antagonism, repression will remain the strongest means for subduing the will of the opposite side.

Denies That Appeal to Any Constitution Will Stand.

Even if in any country a dictatorship of the proletariat be formed within the frame-work of a democracy this arrangement will be no protection against civil war. The question of who is to rule in the country—a question of life or death for the bourgeoisie—is not going to be decided by both sides referring to paragraph this or that of the constitution, but by the use of every form of violence.

The degree of cruelty in the struggle depends on a series of internal and an international circumstances. The crueler and more dangerous is the resistance of the overthrown class enemy the more inevitably does the system of repression harden into a system of terrorism.

It is permissible to kill a murderer in order to save yourself? May oppressed slaves rise against their masters? Is it permissible to buy freedom at the price of the death of your jailers? If human life in general is sacred and inviolable, it becomes necessary to give up not only terror, not only war, but revolution as well.

Perhaps life ceases to be sacred when it is that of people speaking a different language? Or is mass-murder organized according to strategic and tactical rules, not murder? Verily, it would be difficult in our day to put forward a "principle" that is more hypocritical and more stupid at one and the same time.

As long as human work, and consequently human life too, is a commodity that is bought and sold, and exploited and robbed, the principle of the "sacredness of human life" is a most soundlessly lie, whose object is to keep the oppressed slaves in their chains.

Cites "Iron Laws of War" for Wholesale Murder of Opponents.

We fought against the death penalty, introduced by Kerensky, because it was applied by the courts-martial of the old army to soldiers who refused to continue the imperialist war. We wrested this weapon from the hands of the old courts-martial, abolished the courts themselves and dissolved the old army that had made them. Destroying in the red army and the country generally, counter-revolutionary plotters who were trying to restore the old regime by means of risings, murders and disorganization, we acted according to the iron laws of war, in order that victory should stay on our side.

If we are to look for formal contradictions, we should look first of all to the white terror, the instrument of those classes which call themselves Christian, go in for an idealist philosophy and are firmly convinced that the ego (their own) is a free agent.

As for us, we never indulged in any Kantian-priestly, vegetarian-Quaker chatter about the "sacredness of human life." We were revolutionaries in opposition, and we have remained revolutionaries after getting into power. In order that human beings may become sacred, the social order which crucifies them must be de-

Is it permissible to close a newspaper? In time of war all institutions and organs of government and of public opinion become, directly or indirectly organs for the prosecution of the war. This is true in the first place of the press. Not one government conducting a serious war allows publications existing on its territory to support the enemy, either openly or in a masked form. So much the more is this the case in a civil war. The nature of the latter is such that each of the fighting sides has considerable numbers of people in the rear of the enemy.

Fed on the stale gossip of the political backyards of the Russian revolution, our critics imagine that without Cadet Menshevik publicity the soviet apparatus is eaten up with "bandits and adventurers." Such was the opinion of the mensheviks a year and a half ago. Now even they no longer dare to repeat this accusation.

With the help of the soviet control and sifting by the party, in the tense atmosphere of war, the soviet government settled accounts with the bandits and adventurers that had floated to the top at the time of the coup d'état, far better than any government has ever done.

We are at war. We are fighting to the death. The press is the instrument not of some distant society, but of two irreconcilable, armed, fighting camps. We destroy the press of the counter-revolution just as we destroy their fortified positions, their stores, their communications, their scouts. We deprive ourselves of the "Beleaguered city," wrote the Commissar Arthur Arnoux, of Paris, "cannot permit the open expression in its midst of a desire for its fall, appeals to betray its warriors, its defenders, communication to its enemy of the movements of its troops. Such was the position of Paris during the commune."

Such has been the position of Soviet Russia throughout the two years of her existence.

Our "truth" of course is not absolute. But as we are just now pouring out our blood for it, we have neither the means nor the possibility of conducting a literary discussion ried an open war with us.

Story of the Fall of Mrs. Barney's Greek God

At Sixty-six She Discards Thirty-six Year Old Christian Hemmick and Society Is Wondering What She Will Do Next—The Wonderful Lady Has Flirted With Art, the Drama and Terpsichore and Has Kept Her Family on Pins and Needles for Years

When Christian Hemmick told his aged wife that youth and age cannot live together, Mrs. Hemmick quickly rid herself of her one-time Greek god

When this life size statue appeared in the Barney garden and when it was rumored that it was the work of Laura Barney and that her sister Natalie had posed for it all Washington flocked to see it

Crabbed age and youth Cannot live together;
Youth is full of pleasure,
Age is full of care.

THIS last winter Christian D. Hemmick, having begun to feel his oats at the age of thirty-six, sang to his wife, who had had some thirty years' longer experience than he, and more than thirty years' more fun.

It is no wonder that Mrs. Alice Pike Barney Hemmick was annoyed and bade her one-time Greek god begone to Paris or Chicago or Hades. She was through with him, and this particular romance in the sunny afternoon of her somewhat tropical life was a closed incident.

So it came about the other day that a Chicago court granted the youthful Mr. Hemmick a divorce on the ground that his not so youthful spouse had deserted him, and Mrs. Christian D. Hemmick's visiting cards bear once again the inscription "Mrs. Alice P. Barney." She had had nine years of Hemmick, and even a Greek god will tarnish in nine years if over-exposed and show his muddy feet.

The beautiful and accomplished Mrs. Barney annexed her Greek god when he had been visible to the mundane eye twenty-six years. The bride had been whirling just about twice as long. The young man said nothing then about crabbed age. No, indeed. There never was anything either crabbed or aged about the vivacious, lifeful lady, either when she was Alice Pike, Mrs. Alfred Clifford Barney or Mrs. Christian D. Hemmick, and probably never will be. She is not so constituted. Christian Hemmick is likely older at thirty-six than the sixty-six-year-old wife, as he plaintively told the court, deserted him.

"We are three sisters," once said the lovely Natalie Barney, her mother and her sister Laura being the other two. It was common society quip to speak of "the three Barney girls." The mother kept young in every way, and attractive as her daughters were did not have to yield an inch to them in the way of attention from the admiring male. Nevertheless it did come as something of a shock to those in and about the Barney circles when nine years ago the engagement of Barney mère to young Mr. Hemmick was announced. The "Barney girls" were known in social and artistic circles in Paris and London, Washington, New York and Newport. They were always giving one something to talk about, but Mamma Barney broke the record when she bestowed her affections upon the boyish Hemmick.

Natalie and Laura got a stepfather younger than either of them, and it is rumored that they expressed their natural displeasure—but that didn't worry mamma. The lively bride had some $5,000,000 left her by her first husband, and a large fortune from her father's estate. The girls had $2,500,000 apiece left them by their father, which would seem to be enough to keep a modest young woman in toilet requisites. Mrs. Barney, however, just before her marriage, gave them $3,000,000 of the money their father had left her. This action, it was announced at the time, was taken at the request of the bridegroom, to show that really, you know, money had nothing whatever to do with the surge of his affection for the mother of his step-daughters.

For when a poor young man marries a wealthy woman twice his age there are always people mean enough to say things.

The wonderful Mrs. Barney, however, cared not a whit who said anything. She has always been a law unto herself, quite competent, thank you, to manage her own affairs, and usually to make other folks like her management. The petite, fair-haired, graceful woman kept her life full of interest, suffering no rust. She painted pictures, meritorious pictures—several of them have been exhibited in the Paris Salon. She wrote plays, which were produced. She loved to direct gorgeous pageants, and could do it better than any one else. She composed music, good music. She gave oriental dances in public under a pseudonym. She wrote three plays and herself directed their performance. In the last of the three, "The Man in the Moon," young Hemmick had a minor part. The play was produced at the Belasco Theater. During the rehearsals, as author and director of the play, she naturally saw a good deal of Hemmick and interested herself in his social advancement. His father, Ronald Hemmick, had been United States Consul at Geneva, and the young man was making his home in Washington with an aunt.

It was natural that Studio House should become a gathering place for aspiring young artists, musicians, writers and actors. It was there, nearly ten years ago, that the hostess met a tall, handsome young man of pleasing address, whom she described in her artistic enthusiasm as "the reincarnation of a Greek god." Mrs. Barney, who was indefatigable in doing things that interested her for charitable purposes, took an active part in amateur theatricals. She wrote three plays and herself

Christian Hemmick acted in a play which Mrs. Barney had written and during the course of rehearsals the author fell in love with the young son of Ronald Hemmick, former United States Consul at Geneva. Society talked for months of the engagement, for Mrs. Barney was thirty years the senior of her handsome fiance directed their performance. In the last of the three, "The Man in the Moon," young Hemmick had a minor part. The play was produced at the Belasco Theater. During the rehearsals, as author and director of the play, she naturally saw a good deal of Hemmick and interested herself in his social advancement. His father, Ronald Hemmick, had been United States Consul at Geneva, and the young man was making his home in Washington with an aunt.

Mrs. Barney's friends were so accustomed to her interest in young folks that they did not suppose she had any especial interest in the handsome young Mr. Hemmick. So the announcement of the engagement in the winter of 1911 made tea table talk for many a day, talk in Washington and New York and Chicago and Newport and Bar Harbor and Cincinnati and London and Paris and Berlin and Rome.

The Barneys were always giving their friends and sometimes the public something to talk about. A couple of years before the episode of the nude statue in the garden of Studio House caused amusement on two sides of the Atlantic. One day in October the life size figure of a sleeping woman, done in marble and entirely guiltless of drapery, was discovered in the Barney garden by a passerby. Mrs. Barney and her daughter were in Paris. The busybodies of the capital made a sensation of the statue. The police were told that such nudity visible from the street should be draped, and shocked Washington went out to Sheridan Castle in droves. Then the report went about, and was published as a fact, that the statue had been sculptured by Laura Barney with her sister Natalie as a model. A contemporary account is headed "Miss Barney Poses to Her Sister for Undraped Statue—Beautiful Marble Nymph in the Garden of the Society Girl's Very Wealthy Mother's Washington Residence." The account went on to say: "The marble nymph, chaste and cold, appears to be sleeping. She has a form worthy of Diana, and her utter lack of drapery would indicate that she had just emerged from the bath."

Whereupon shocked Washington went out again to Sheridan Circle to take another look. The police ordered the statue covered to keep the crowds away. Mischievous boys at night removed the drapery. Then the police persuaded the Barney caretakers to take the provoking thing into the house.

Mrs. Barney and the Barney girls were properly angry when the story reached them in Paris. It was explained that the statue had been made in Paris by Miss Laura Barney, but it was indignantly denied that her sister had been the model. "My daughter Laura executed the statue nine years ago," said Mrs. Barney. "A model named Marguerite Sylvestre posed for my daughter. The statue has been highly praised. It is a nude, of course, but there is nothing shocking about it or suggestive in any way. I had intended to place it in my Washington house, which has been in charge of a caretaker in my absence. The statue was placed in my yard temporarily."

"It is certainly prudery run riot. This statue reclining in my private yard objectionable? It is a pity persons should be looking for evil in what is pure and good."

A year or two before this a New York physician got Mrs. Barney's name in the papers by a novelty in the way of presssing his suit for the hand of the wealthy and charming widow. He went before a notary and made affidavit that Mrs. Barney was as fascinating as she was in her girlhood days and that if she married him he would never touch a penny of her money. However, "Love by Affidavit" didn't win, and the young Greek god did. He probably made his protestations in camera.

Mrs. Barney became interested in her husband through the medium of the stage, and it is the stage that each now blames her for the smash-up of the romance. "I have never expected much attention from Christian," said his former wife, "but of late I have had none. He is angry with me because I would sign no more large checks. He has taken up the society of actors."

Says the deserted husband to the court: "We had a great many differences. She didn't approve of my theatrical associates, and without my knowledge and consent she packed up and went to Paris, where she has been ever since."

The man who married "the most interesting woman in Washington" when he was a youngster is free to go his own Thespian-loving way without let or hindrance by his motherly wife.

And Alice Pike Barney? Her friends say:

"Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite variety."

Sherry Bayne Learns, to His Surprise, That Where Two's Company a Crowd's a Great Help.

ON this particular evening two young gentlemen, easily the most favorably known in the delightful town of Portleigh, were very deep, and sometimes profane, in the process of prinking for a bridge and dance at the home of State Senator Brooks.

Portleigh, if we remember well, has a population of 40,000 souls," as the Globe newspaper there is wont to say: In a town of such moderate and friendly dimensions, where every one has intimate and sometimes damaging knowledge of every one else, no prominent personage escapes without some pet name that sticks, merry or witty or spiteful. Thus Miss Sylvia Brooks, only remaining spinster under the senator's roof, just turned 20 and the beauty of the town, is not simply and sweetly Sylvia Brooks—not to the young men who aspire to her hand, and this means every one there. Among themselves, at least, she is "Slivery" Brooks. This is their fling at the great little politician's tantalizing wealth and highly uncertain temper—which, however, they never ceased hoping to overcome.

Almost as a matter of course, the Hon. Stephen Pynchon, the elder of the two young gentlemen aforementioned, once mayor of Portleigh, and then defeated in love, and a cynical bachelor ever since, is "Pinch." The other young man is known to his fellows by the once appropriate name of "Sherry"; otherwise he is Mr. John Sheridan Bayne, formerly more wealthy than now, and still thought more than a little "wild."

Certainly this evening he was more than wild in a song that ran:

"The cap'n of police is dead,
Because he lost his life;
He lately was a married man,
Because he had a wife."

when something—a thought, probably—stopped the song.

"Pinch," said he, or shouted, rather, from the soft depths of a lathered face; "don't drop dead, but I'll lay you a twenty I'm going to score with the senator—at last. And that's tonight! Are you on?"

There being no reply, he strolled from his bath down the hall to the bath at the other end of the suite they occupied in the club. This suite consisted of the said two baths, two bedrooms of monkish dimensions, a sitting room of ampler expanse, and another known as "the sink of iniquity," where the Hon. Stephen milled at night over his cases at law, and perhaps certain other "cases."

"You old crab! Did you hear what I said?" Sherry poked into the door a bulb of iridescent lather, parted by a gap made by his broad grin. "I said I was going to score with the little senator—tonight. At last. And I'll lay you a twenty I have him in the hollow of my hand. It's cost me a pretty penny, but this time I've got him, sure. In the hollow of my hand. Do you get me?" He dealt a light hook to the wind of the Hon. Stephen, who slowly turned an answering oval of lather with a serious expression upon it.

"One more twenty from you, my boy, and I can retire for life," he said, and added to a grim reflection in his mirror: "When you're really got Sylvia in the hollow of your hand, I'll cheerfully lose two or three of them."

The smile on Sherry's lather closed. "H'm! Cheerful mummy!" he commented, retreated, and revenged himself in song.

Half an hour afterward the two men were passing in review before each other, suiting the height of a trouser hanging to the other's ideal, or their hats to the proper cant. Each was a striking example of what generous concessions real men may safely make to the fashion plate. With still another half hour to waste before proceeding to the senator's house, they sat down before the remains of a fire on their hearth, one with his thoughtful pipe, the younger humming again.

At length the Hon. Stephen's endurance broke. "Well, confound it! What's all the grand final stroke you've got for the senator? Why are you twitting there, like a canary?"

"O, of course you may win. It mayn't come off. The senator has such a hard time living down my past. Even my little pile of money—what's left of it—doesn't talk any more. Or it won't since I sank about half of it in a daredevil venture the other day. I did it all for the senator, too. Sometimes I wonder just what it is he can't forgive in me."

The Hon. Stephen calculated a moment. "I can't think which one of the million things it might be!"

"I used to think it was because I missed so many prizes in college—all of them, in fact. But the senator wasn't a bit surprised. And said so. The senator has never appreciated me. It began long ago. One time, before you came here, when the senator was first bursting into politics, his brother got married, and Brooks got up a great outdoor wedding—invited the whole voting strength of Portleigh—brass band, ox roast, and all that. If the brother had died, he'd have planned the funeral to catch as many votes as possible. All in the highest taste, of course. Well—"Sherry lurched into deeper melancholy in his chair—"just when the band was tooting up for the wedding march and all was ready I stole up behind the leader, where the band could see me, and began sucking a lemon."

Sherry smiled sadly. The Hon. Stephen, in spite of himself, chuckled.

"I will say," Sherry grieved on, "the effect was something beautiful. It puckered the jaws of every mother's son of them. Not one could play a note. The leader waved and raved. By that time the crowd was roaring with laughter. And little Senator Brooks was purple with swearing. It nearly broke up the wedding. Of course, it got into the papers, and almost lost him an election. It seemed to get under the senator's skin." Sherry sighed. "I wasn't, you see, thinking of Sylvia then."

For a minute the two men watched the fire, one with his grin, the other with his sad stare.

"And then," Sherry went on with his recollections, Aunt Mary told me I ought to be doing something, so I took up life insurance for a profession. It looked like a cinch. In a town of this size no one can get away from you for long. Somebody told me the best place to talk life insurance was a funeral. It's so impressive; such an object

"Sylvia, I had to bring you to the one place where we could have a nice quiet talk. Ha-VUD! O, damn!"—he was forced to break off.

Sherry's gallies. Usually whenever Sherry was in the house the senator kept to himself. For extra security this evening he locked himself into his study—and twenty times he found himself tricked out of it, unable to miss a minute longer the cause of such hearty laughter. Twenty times he found the business of auction suspended while the forty—and himself—rocked with merriment over some new drollery from Sheridan Bayne. In vain the senator forced a frown over his round and ruddy face. If he played the fox, Sherry Bayne at least played the fox terrier, and cleverly fetched a roar from the senator himself with a takeoff to the life on one of the senator's bitterest political rivals. Before he had been there an hour he had frightened Sylvia half to death by winning her father to a hunting party for the following week. And, of course, as he said he would, the young villain "scored."

It was after the supper was served, when the gentlemen had retired to smoke the senator's cigars and listen to Sherry. To the senator himself the lure of Sherry's wit proved irresistible. For the benefit of his hosts the boy let off a few of his best, and finally maneuvered the wily politician far enough in a corner to whisper suddenly.

"Can you give me a moment, sir? It's something of the utmost importance to you. It's not about Sylvia," he was hasty to add.

"H'm! What's it about?" The senator put on his most formidable air.

"It's not about Sylvia, sir. A matter of business. And I shouldn't bother you with it if I didn't know it was pressing in the extreme. There's no time to be lost. Will you, sir, if you please?"

"O, well." Reluctantly, suspiciously, the senator led the way to his study. "Fire away," he commanded, when the door was shut.

Sherry sat down with an air of crushing responsibility in one of the senator's massive chairs, and with a glance pleaded with the senator to copy him.

"Are you quite sure, sir, of the best intentions of that man Landers, in the matter of financing the street car extension?"

"H'm, h'm! Aren't you beyond your depth, my boy?"

"You mean my knowing the company has given its note to Landers, and put up the system as security? I know it's only a formality, sir. And as one of the stockholders I don't much care. The question is, will Landers return the property when the note comes due?"

The senator flushed, but glared. "How come you to know such things, young man?"

"No matter about that, sir. But I've learned that Mr. Landers is not quite trustworthy in matters of agreement among gentlemen. He's secretary of the corporation, and it was perfectly proper to raise your $600,000 on the note to him. It's cost him nothing, and he's only holding the property as part of the formality. That means, the Portleigh street car system is in his pocket. And I've heard it said, sir, that he's going to keep it, unless we fight him out of his boots. I'd cheerfully ride him out of town on a rail, sir. But it might make a scandal. The public mightn't quite understand your transaction. So I thought you might take precautions—"

"Bless your soul, my boy, you leave that to me!" the senator said, airily. All the same his foxy eyes said something else. They said the senator was frightened out of his own boots—and tickled to death to have been warned in time. "I'm not quite an infant in matters of business," he said, when he had calmed down a bit.

Sherry was thinking, "O, but you are, sir!" Aloud he said, "No, sir, but you're so honest that you are apt to believe every man as honest as yourself. So I thought—"

"Tut, tut!" The senator let himself be

I really bought the paper for was to support your campaign for Steve Pynchon for the county judgeship. Had you thought of it, sir?"

Sherry cocked his head towards the ceiling, to give that time to soak in. Whilst the senator now gasped out.

"Perhaps you hadn't thought of it. But I know how dear he has been to you ever since he made your fortune by winning your suit for the Portleigh gas franchise. And how much you've wanted him to marry Sylvia, since—Er, anyway, since Marjorie got married, Pinch has talked of moving away to New York."

"N—no!" The senator stiffened bolt upright in his chair at that. "Pynchon moving away?"

"Maybe you didn't know, sir, but Pynchon took the affair about Marjorie almost as badly as you did. But if you and I were to run him for the judgeship it might pin him here. And I know you like him almost as much as you do me." Sherry was rising, "So I thought if we worked together, you and I, senator—" He held out his hand. "I can't tell you how happy it makes me to feel that we're to be so closely associated. Sort of a family affair. You know. And now you'll forgive me, sir, if I tear myself away to Sylvia? Only one last word—you won't fail to keep an eye on that man Landers, will you?" His hand was on the doorknob.

"One homont!" the senator stayed him. "Pynchon, you say—The judgeship? I—I hadn't thought—" The senator looked the young devil over astonished, from head to foot, slowly. Then his hand went into an inside pocket. "Here!" he gasped. "Ha—have a cigar!"

Later that night, as the servants were putting out the lights, the senator wandered out of his study warily, and, seeing the young guests gone, he sought the society of his daughter. He found her in the hall, having a long look through the glass panels to the front door, through the last of her guests had some time been gone.

"Sylvia, one moment." He started the girl by kissing her warmly. "Has—has anything passed lately between Sherry Bayne and you?"

"No, father. Why? You never let me see me, except in a crowd."

"Hasn't he asked you to the Yale game in Cambridge—with your mother?"

"N—no." But Sylvia's dark eyes brightened visibly. "N—not yet," she faltered. "But if he does, I may go?"

"Has he said anything to you about being my son-in-law?"

"Good gracious, father! He wouldn't dare!"

"O, he wouldn't dare, would he?"

And Sylvia wondered why her father, as himself turned off the last hall light, chuckled so strangely.

Out of the darkness he said to her in a sepulchral voice, "You—like him?"

And out of the darkness he received an embrace, a kiss, and a reply. "He's—he's awfully amusing."

"Well," said the senator, "I guess the Yale game is a big enough crowd!"

So when the senator came to see a happy off at the train one morning that November, his objections, to his infinite disgust, were by no means so violent as he had wished and planned them to be. Perhaps the reflection amused him, that Sylvia, ushered so far into the greater outside world, was in the way of discovering that Sherry Bayne was not the only merry Andrew in the offing. Nor was the senator, above a bit of satisfaction at having Sherry foot the bills for his own downfall. So they set off for Cambridge while the senator repaired to his office over the street car system of which he was still president, highly pleased with having finished off the pestilential Sherry.

That evening, when Sherry and his guests sat down to dinner in the Boston hotel, where he had engaged them a handsome suite, it would have taken a nice calculation to determine which of the three was deriving the most satisfaction from their adventure. To Sylvia it was, for all her other travels, an excursion into wonderland. To Europe she had been, and across America, but never quite to anything like this. However big a man the senator was in his own corner of his own state, his importance seemed to vanish farther out, and they traveled as merely other simple "millionaires." This was different.

This great occasion of a championship game had gathered, as it always does, a glittering array of notables of every variety, and Sylvia could never have told whether she was the more amazed or the more delighted by the number of these that Sherry knew, and proudly presented to her mother and herself. Their dinner was lengthened to twice its normal length by Sherry's constant visits to other tables, to fetch back former football captains, or members of Wall street banking firms, or somebody doing something in the diplomatic service. Or they first saw Sherry for themselves, and rushed to his table to greet him hilariously. There seemed to be no end to this brilliant acquaintanceship, no end to their noisy delight at seeing him again. It was—

"Hello, you little old cherub! It gets my eyes to see you again!" from some young devil nearly as handsome as Sherry. Or—

"Sherry Bayne! This is luck. You're the last man we need. Drop everything. We're off to Uganda next week. And nothing will be right without you!"

Even dashing and imposing elderly grads knew Sherry—gentlemen very evidently of the highest importance in the world. One of them completely finished off Mrs. Brooks' gathering astonishment, and brought the united attention of the whole dining room, with his rush for Sherry from a far corner, his napkin joyously waving.

"Sherry!" He grasped both of Sherry's hands. "It's so good to see you again! Where have you buried yourself? Come back home with me—or"—the gentleman glanced in consternation and then in shrewd understanding at Sylvia—"at least come when you can tear away. And bring your guests. We haven't had a good laugh since you left last time. Ethel is losing all her bloom over you. I often hear her sobbing into her midnight pillow. Now, mind! Wire when you're coming. How're you betting on the score?"

So the dinner had not proceeded beyond the fish before Sylvia, and likewise her mother, had made a discovery. The discovery of Sherry Bayne.

Along with other discoveries. Not all the hubbub about their table was occasioned by Sherry alone. Sylvia had her part. Arrayed in a confection purposely ordered from New York against this event, Sylvia was radiantly, appallingly beautiful. The giddy and vociferous good cheer about her, the bursts of Yale and Harvard cheering, the consciousness of her just place among the gorgeously caparisoned women there, had painted an extra tint on Sylvia's cheeks, lit a new sparkle in her slate-blue eyes, and candidly parted her lips in a smile of the gayest and frankest delight. Occasionally the smile was paid to Sherry, in coin of honest appreciation—no more. Other girls about them forgot to be jealous of the attention paid her, so winning, so candid was her pleasure. Men stared at her openly, or gazed at her with envy, and forgot to join in the cheers. As for Sherry—Sherry was "scoring."

At the theater, later, more excitement still, where a music-comedy made what progress it could against irrepressible intrusions of cheering and aimless applause.

At last, the game next day. In a taxi studded with crimson chrysanthemums and furs, and rugs, and Mrs. Brooks and Sylvia, and Sherry, they rattled out to Soldiers field.

Thanks to his past performances on the football field, Sherry had been blessed by the miracle of three excellent seats in the stadium, down among other noted players and athletes of yore, and everywhere greeted by them with hearty shouts of welcome. Here there was more staring—at Sherry first. After that the stares were chiefly for the radiant thing he brought with him. Men about them wondered to themselves what could be the lucky dog with all that popularity and the devilish pretty girl.

And the remarkable fact remains to be recorded that Sherry Bayne saw scarcely a dozen plays in the game. It was nearly an hour after it was over, when they left the stadium for the Lampoon tea, that he privately drew an acquaintance aside, risked his reputation for sanity, and asked the final score. There had been certain reasons for his overlooking that trifle.

Between Sylvia and her mother Sherry had seated himself, to dispense his explanations with entire impartiality; and with the first roar that broke from the Yale side, as their team pranced into the concrete magnet, he cheerfully began his duties with an aside to himself.

"I don't know that I'm playing altogether fairly with your father. We might have waited till next year and gone to New Haven. The Yale bowl holds 30,000 more than this. I hope this crowd will do, though. It's the closest I could come to your father's idea this year. You don't think he'll be nervous, Sylvia? But look at that team!"

The Yale players were rehearsing their signals, and the old interest in the game had reassured itself for the moment.

"That bunch is beaten already, before the whistle blows," Sherry was pronouncing. "They know it! Look at 'em. See how they pick up their feet. They'll fumble from nervousness and lose a touchdown in the first five minutes. Wait and see. Watch 'em now. While I watch you!"

Sylvia looked up at him, puzzled as to his meaning, until something in Sherry's eyes made the meaning violently clear.

"Hush, Sherry!" she hastily cautioned, for the cover of cheering under which he had been speaking died away and let his final words stand out for all to hear. A few people on the tier below them turned to see who had spoken and Sherry was quickly driven back to the subject of football.

"The wind, you'll notice, Mrs. Brooks, is from the open end of the stadium. Now if Harvard wins the toss, watch Massingham, the Harvard captain, pick the windward half and then kick on the first snap of the ball."

"Yes, yes. I see," says Mrs. Brooks, seeing chiefly the people turning to listen to Sherry.

"Massingham knows he's a longer punter than Yale's got this year and he isn't scared to boot. And—"Sherry promptly and shamelessly turned away now to Sylvia, since Yale had cut loose another cheer—"now a quiet little talk with you, dear. I brought you stroyed. And that can only be done with it over the abyss.

There is another difference between the white terror and the red that is of decisive importance for Marxists. The white terror is the instrument of a historically reactionary class. When we exposed the uselessness of repression on the part of a bourgeois state dealing with the proletariat we never denied the fact that by arrests and punishments the ruling classes might temporarily check the development of the social revolution.

Says the Bourgeoisie Is Ruining Civilization.

But we were convinced that they could not stop it. We based ourselves on the fact that the proletariat is the historically rising class and that bourgeois society cannot develop without at the same time increasing the strength of the proletariat. The bourgeoisie in the present epoch is a sinking class. It not only no longer plays an essential part in production, but, by its imperialist methods of acquisition, it ruins the world's economic order and ruins human civilization.

His Prediction Made Five Years Ago in "War and Peace."

Five years ago I wrote as follows in a book published in the German language under the title of "War and Peace":

"Imperialism tore society by force out of its state of unstable equilibrium. It burst open the lock-gates with fact it threatens to drag all society which social-democracy had dammed up the flood of proletarian revolutionary energy, and directed that flood into its course. This monstrous historical experiment, which at one blow broke the backbone of the socialist international, is the bearer at the same time of mortal danger to bourgeois society itself. The hammer has been wrung from the hands of the worker and replaced by the sword. The worker, bound hand and foot by the apparatus of the capitalist economic system, is suddenly torn away from all this and taught to put collective interests higher than his domestic happiness, higher than his very life.

"With the arms made by himself in his hands, the worker is placed in a situation where the political fate of the state depends directly upon him. Those who in normal times oppressed and despised him now flatter him and try to curry favor. At the same time he comes into intimate contact with those very cannon which, according to Lassalle, form the keystone of the constitution. He crosses the boundaries of states, takes part in forcible requisitions, cities change hands under his blows. Changes take place that the last generation never saw.

"Even if the advanced among the workers were theoretically aware of the fact that force is the midwife of right, their political thinking nevertheless remained permeated with the spirit of positivism and accommodation to bourgeois legality. Now the school of war, will feel the need of legionnaires, ready and able to defend the language of force at with a recklessness that in its way to avenge themselves for their humiliations abroad on the blood of their own proletariat. As for the bourgeoisie of the victorious countries, it is filled with arrogance and reader than ever

The Ludendorff bands are burning borders on the heroic the privileged position of the bourgeoisie that trained them.

The revolution would probably be more humane if the proletariat were able to "buy off all this band," as Marx once put it. But during the war capitalism put too heavy a burden of debts on the workers and broke up the apparatus of production too thoroughly to make it possible to speak seriously of a ransom that would cause the bourgeoisie silently to accept the new order. The masses have lost too much blood, have suffered too much and grown too embittered to permit of such a decision, which in any case would be beyond their economic strength.

Sees a Divergent Reflex of the Great Middle Classes.

All this is indisputable. But to what has been said must be added this, that the war exercised no less influence on the minds of the governing classes; in proportion as the masses became more exalted the classes have grown more intransigent.

HIS FRIEND AND HIS WIFE :

By Cosmo Hamilton

"Oh, Julian, why don't you say something? Why don't you put me out of my misery?"

The girl's cry cut deeply, but still he had nothing to say. The triumph of his return was a sorry thing.

And then, under a strong revulsion of feeling, all that was most human in Daisy came to the surface and turned her into a little figure of anger and indignation. "If you think that I'm going to play the part of the humble domestic mouse while you and Margaret arrange things to please yourselves you're wrong. There's one thing that I'll not be made to look and that's a fool. This is a question of pride, not of heart, and by going to Margaret before you came to me you've made me see the whole story in its true light. There is only one thing I can do now—take the case back to court and get even with Margaret. She shall pay for this deceit to the very last inch, and Mrs. Hicks shall be my witness."

In his mind's eye Julian could see Bob Meredith waiting up in his den for the woman who did not love him, but who was going to sacrifice her happiness for the sake of her child and her home. "For God's sake," he said, "go steady."

Once more the girl's young voice rang out. "Be honest with me then," she cried.

And as Julian looked at her standing in front of him in all her loveliness, but with her charity and her goodness of heart blurred by her desire for revenge, he decided to take a chance. Honesty was her fetish, and if he catered to that fully and completely he might yet save the position even if his own happiness were jeopardized.

"This is the truth," he said. "You shall have it all. The woman I was caught with at Baltimore was Margaret. The story about the other woman was cooked up for Bob's sake, but just now, simply because I couldn't stand this network of lies and deceit that you hate as much as I do, I went to Bob's house and saw Margaret. I asked her to chuck everything and clear out with me, and she wouldn't. She is going to dedicate the rest of her life to Bob and to the boy, and she told me to go back to you and ask you to forgive me and to tell you that I am ready and willing to play the game; and I've come back and there isn't anything I won't do to try and heal the wound that I've given you—not anything, Daisy, as God's my judge."

But with a look on her face which Julian had never seen before, Daisy went swiftly to the window. "You can come with me or not," she said, "just as you like. I'm going to Margaret. I'm going to let Bob Meredith see that you and she have made a fool of me. I can stand everything but that."

"Oh no," he said, "don't." And he went over to her and caught hold of her arms and held her tight. "Hit me as hard as you like, but let Margaret off. She wants to play the game. I tell you, and there's Bob and that boy. Give her a chance."

But Daisy tore herself away. "Why should she have a chance? There's my life, my pride and my dignity, and you and she have made me look a fool. Margaret must suffer as much as I'm suffering, and all four of us must get out of this mass of deceit and be broken together."

She went out into the moonlight, angry, outraged and with a metaphysical whip in her hand with which she was determined to leave on Margaret's soft body a red and glaring welt. Clothed in chastity, it was ironical. Revenge was justified.

But the picture of Margaret's face as he had last seen it was stamped on Julian's brain. She was a good girl who had been tempted by him from the straight path. She loved him and had given him up. At all costs he must save her. Once more, therefore, he placed himself in front of the girl who had it in her power to put the little house of Meredith in utter shambles. "Do you believe in God?" he asked.

It was an inspiration. Something was given to Julian at that instant which is not placed upon the lips of any man whose spirit has not at one time or another been in touch with the Divine Father. He was permitted to use this question, even he, scandalous as his behavior had been, because deep down in his heart there was the sincere desire to rise on steppin' stones and to render himself worthy, very humbly and very earnestly, of the girl who had gone with him to the altar. Like Margaret he had learned his lesson and was eager to pay the price for a passionate interlude which had jeopardized the happiness of two other people.

Under the unexpected question Daisy bent like a little tree beneath a sudden wind. She had been for a moment almost almighty in her power of punishment, but the name of God stood for mercy in all its beauty, in all its charitableness, and she believed in Him. She saw herself, whip in hand, a figure of wrath, and she trembled and was ashamed. All the "hardness" went out of her face, all the blase out of her eyes. She stood startled, wistfully trying to hear something in the beautiful quietude of the night which might come from the angels. Above her the roof of the world gleamed with little stars, and the quiet breathing of the flowers came up to her from the earth. Suddenly her heart melted and tears burst from her eyes and love drove revenge out of her sight, and she tottered forward and laid her head on Julian's chest.

And when, finally, this man who had been almost spoiled by his good looks could find his voice, it was to say, "Thank you—thank you most awfully. I'm on my knees before you, Daisy. I love and respect you, and all my life shall be devoted to your happiness."

And away up in a little blue space another star came out.

CHAPTER VI.

There's a house on Quaker Hill before which strangers drew up short and gaped. Either they like it so much that their search for enthusiastic words fails or they burst into fits of derisive laughter and twist into comic distortions. It takes their breath away. With the dead level of convention in their eyes it acts upon them as would eloquence and real emotion in the mouth of the average clergyman.

From a purely architectural point of view it is a very perfect specimen of type and period, and as such appeals to people of artistic understanding. To others it is just a nightmare of bricks and mortar, a building which might have been designed by Urban for the cover of Vogue or by Hugo Rumbold as the scene of an operatic setting for one of Grimm's fairy tales. Even these last, however, when they get used to it and recover from its erratic sky line and unconvincing appearance, find that its subtle charm grows on them, and they never fail finally to leave it behind them without wishing to know something of the character and temperament of the man who lives in it.

It belongs, of course, to George O'Gorman Mahan, the man who was born in Cork and brought up in Brooklyn; the man who invented that world-famous little machine for beating up eggs, and with the money derived from it universal sale elaborated a hundred other small inventions for domestic purposes into a huge business and made a fortune. The proud and somewhat astonished manufacturers of things which were so obviously good that people asked themselves how they failed to think of them, he followed the usual course of business men year in year out, became the abject slave of his own capability, and permitted nothing to tempt him away from his desk until nature put a cold finger upon his machinery and called a halt. Doctors pattered at his works, each one, of course, finding a different reason for his engine trouble, and for a time optimism went out of the sick man's heart and left him inert. Then the still, small voice of a long-forgotten ambition called and called, was finally understood, and up went Mahan to his room and packed a bag. The fetish of dollar hunting worked no longer. He must go forth and spend. And so, verging on forty-five, he went away for his first holiday to Europe—and very nearly never returned. In a state of perpetual bewilderment, ecstasy, surprise, untranslatable satisfaction and naive amusement, he found that the world did not consist merely of downtown and uptown, of subway and restaurant, of office and bedroom. Startled and delighted, moved to tears and laughter, he made a voyage of discovery, like a squirrel born in and suddenly set free from a whirling cage, found himself in places only the mere suggestion of which had touched him in his sleep. Open-mouthed he passed through picture galleries, stood bewitched beneath the misy roofs of old cathedrals, gazed enraptured at ancient cities from surrounding hills, sat intoxicated by great outbursts of orchestral music, and mingled humbly among vast crowds whose language and whose point of view were equally strange and to whom George O'Gorman Mahan, the utensil king, was less than the dust. Finally, budding with new ideas, bursting with new thoughts, stirred by new sap, quivering with a new emotion, he tore himself away, and coming back to old familiar haunts with health and gratitude, set out to find an architect with enough poetry in his soul to enable him to bring into existence a house of dreams. He had tasted of beauty and of music and of ancient things. In future he must have them in his daily life, to see, to touch and to own.

It was the O'Gorman part of this inventive genius and the royal blood which runs in the veins of nearly every Irishman which demanded all those turrets, towers and drawbridges that caught the eye, surprised the senses and intrigued the curiosity of passers-by. All the poetry and all that half-sad, half-humorous feeling for the fantastic and the grandiose which is indissolubly part of the Irish temperament had been exquisitely caught by the architect. Without any spirit of caricature, and keeping his tongue well out of his cheek, he had fulfilled every wish of George O'Gorman Mahan. He had brought into substantial existence the long-cherished desire which had been hidden in the heart of one who had not, after all, been so long and so intimately associated with domestic utensils as to have grown out of his national habit of letting his spirit soar among the kings and princes who will ever retain their places in the folklore of that tragic-comic island away across the seas. And so the house was a castle.

A man with gray hair, a boy's face, a shrewd, witty and persistent tongue, and the heart of a child we find Egg-Flip Mahan, as he was called, aged fifty-two, at that period of his life when he had just discovered the subtle fascination of golf and was in a position to ignore his office not only during the whole of Saturday but on Wednesday also.

He had been married twice. Kathleen, his first wife, the bright-eyed little Irish girl who had come over steerage on the same boat, had been his inspiration and helpmate from the age of 14. She had presented him not only with her golden optimism and indomitable courage, but with three particularly charming children, one of whom had died in infancy. Then, when just about to enjoy some of the fruits of her husband's success, she had faltered, made a momentary struggle to stay with her man and her children, and having received her call, joined the angels, of whom she was one, in her middle thirties. For several years the lonely and pathetic widow, hurt to the very quick, plunged even deeper into his work for the sake of the boy and girl who bore upon their faces the sweet reminders of his little colic.

With her memory still green in his heart, but unable to face life alone in a pompous New York apartment filled to bursting point with a weird collection of newly-made antiques, Mahan one day two years later met and was very quickly led to the altar by a handsome, definite and ambitious woman who was the widow of an American who had been in the consular service in Buenos Aires. It was she, dressed by Hickson, massaged by Lubelle, manicured by Zosime, and mentally influenced by Elbert Hubbard, who entered the semi-comic portals of O'Gorman's castle, there to spend a rather polite and starlight honeymoon and make the acquaintance of the young Mahans—their 16 and 17 years old respectively.

She brought with her Elsa, a tiny, perfect person with the face of a doll and the body of a Dresden China figure, who not only spoke Spanish like a native but frequently, in a most disconcerting way, thought Spanish. Clangs was her surname, but the sound of this word jarred the patriotic susceptibilities of her stepfathers, who said that it reminded him of the methods of the American Express company with personal baggage—that after some argument Elsa adopted the soft, musical Irish name of her mother's new husband—and it didn't suit her in the least. There was nothing Irish about Elsa. She was as practical as a razor, as logical as a limp stream and as unimaginative as a swan.

From the moment of his second marriage, Egg-Flip Mahan took on a new appearance. His rather wild curly hair was trimmed and oiled. He blushed out into clothes cut by the best New York tailor and developed a sudden passion for boots and ties. He started his business friends by camouflaging his Cork brogue beneath a Bostonian accent, and he broadened and widened into a very charming host whose Gothic pile was the scene of many social entertainments. He identified himself with every movement for the betterment of Quaker Hill, was one of the governors of the country club and the president of the local bank. Also he was the proprietor of the Quaker Hill weekly paper into whose leading articles he frequently poured incoherent drivel against England. He also wrote verses modeled on those of the melodious Moore about his beloved Emerald Isle which, by sending representatives to sit in parliament and refuse everything that was offered in the way of home rule, had utterly prevented Great Britain from perfecting a home rule of her own.

It is," said George, "the funniest world we shall ever know. But it will be a dark and dreary place for me tonight if I foole with my mashie as I did on Saturday. Will you ladies excuse me?" He got up from the table. "Being married to the American Red Cross," he added, turning at the door and showing a line of very white teeth, "means that I shan't see you again for several days, I suppose. Well, good luck, my dear. Don't bring any cooties home with you."

And off he went, as eager as a boy to enjoy a holiday, and with all about him that air of the tired business man who has made the amazing discovery in middle life that the earth contains other places than an office building with its flat head poking into the sky. Whatever had been the excuse made by Stephens, Mrs. Hicks had a nasty surprise in store for this excellent American when he returned from his well-earned game.

It was up in her own room, in one of the many angles of that fantastic house, that Elsa presently unb burdened herself to her friend on the subject which was making her heart leap and dance. The khaki uniform in which she had worked since the formation of that never-to-be-forgotten corps which has gathered into its membership so many of the splendid sisters of the boys who went overseas with the spirit of crusaders, littered the floor. The sunlight of a delicious spring afternoon filtered through the imitation medieval windows, and the room bore little resemblance to that of the pre-war girl who had lived there ever since her mother's marriage to the Irishman. Its table was covered with photographs of men in uniform. There were relics of the war here and there. Mannish looking, much-worn garters sprawled in the corners, and a red flag upon which was worked a white star hung in a conspicuous place.

This stood for George Mahan's son and heir who had gone across in November, 1914, with an ambulance, had served in the Lafayette Esquadrille and eventually been transferred with a commission to the American forces and was still in France waiting to be demobilized. With a croix de guerre upon his broad chest and the look in his eyes of a man who had found himself in losing his irresponsibility, he was a credit to his father, to the little mother whose sweet spirit watched over him and to the country which claimed him. The doll-like girl had blossomed into an alert, capable, well-disciplined little soldier, able to look without shuddering, but with an enormous pity and gratitude, upon limbless men, and those unfortunate paralyzed and twisted by shell shock. The beautiful word service had given Elsa a personality which nothing else could have developed in her, and she was a lively babbler, a good dinner, wearing an imaginary crown tilted over one eye, muttering fiery denunciation of the bloody Sassenach from whom she got so many of his ideas. A lively brook ran away below, babbling like a meeting of the Drama League.

For a little while the two girls stood at the window together and looked down at a wide vista of Quaker Hill which lay beneath them. Innumerable roofs of red and green and gray broke through a mass of motionless greenery that spread to a misty horizon. A curling road, polished by the wheels of racing cars, lost itself behind a ridge of rocks. Here and there a delicate stele was silhouetted against an unflecked sky, and up from it all, to those whose ears were musical, rose the quiet song of peace.

"Just give me a cutlet, some peas and a couple of spuds," said Mahan, straightening a brilliant tie. "You won't mind if I bolt a little food, will you, my dear?"

"We're all in a hurry," replied Mrs. Mahan, who was too obsessed with her job to remember to have powdered her well-formed nose. "I have a committee meeting at local headquarters in twenty minutes and the two girls are eager for tennis. Leave me the big car, George. I must drive back to town after tea. A transport docked this morning and that means a new rush of work."

"Then Elsa, shut the door, wheel about, and with a glowing face and a touch of excitement turned upon Nina Hopper. "Can you guess why I've rushed home on this leave?" she asked.

With her usual quick laugh the young married woman pretended to string an arrow and fire it. "Love," she said. "Who's the man?"

Elsa mounted a cigarette into a long holder and sent forth a thick ring of smoke into a shaft of sunlight. "You never guess in this world. This is romance, and I haven't the faintest idea whether it's going to end happily or not. If I have anything to do with it, it will, but the man in question has altered as much as I have, and I haven't seen him since his transport sneaked away in the night with the first of our troops to go abroad."

"It's Gilbert Carlton," cried Nina. "My dear, how exciting. He's here with his sister, you know."

"Of course I know," said Elsa. "I've had three letters from him in the last week—very short, very friendly and very unhelpful. They give me no clue to his present feelings at all, and I can't read them into them, although I've tried pretty hard, anything that shows me that he remembers the last dance we had together in the Crystal room away back in '17. He just says that he wants to see me again while he's staying here. He's going to be in the clubhouse this afternoon, and I have an appointment to meet him there at 3 o'clock to talk over old times, as he puts it. It was for his sake I don't mind telling you, that I went into the motor corps, and even if he's fallen in love with somebody else in the meantime, and it's quite likely, I shall never regret the work I've done. He was on the verge of proposing to me before he went away, but shied off at the last moment because he barged in just as he was beginning to frame the proper, stilted phrases."

"My dear, I am frightfully sorry. Why didn't you tell me?"

"It didn't matter," said Elsa.

"He's a better man for what he's gone through, and I think that I've improved a bit since, and if he hasn't forgotten all about me, in the meantime we shall come together with an absolute crash. That's why I call it a romance. That's why I'm going round to the club now in a state of nervous excitement which positively makes me jumpy. That's why I feel that I'm standing at the crossroads of my life. Wish me luck, dear old thing. It's the least you can do, considering that it was about you that got re-married, those two. It's a funny world."

"It is," said George, "the funniest world we shall ever know. But it will be a dark and dreary place for me tonight if I foole with my mashie as I did on Saturday. Will you ladies excuse me?" He got up from the table, being married to the American Red Cross," he added, turning at the door and showing a line of very white teeth. "That's why I feel that I'm standing at the crossroads of my life. Wish me luck, dear old thing. It's the least you can do, considering that it was about you that got re-married, those two. It's a funny world."

This was said with an outward appearance of self-control to be expected of one who had driven an ambulance through the crowded traffic of New York by day and night, who had shivered at the docks in the early hours of winter mornings and been called out of bed in the first moments of beauty sleep to play her part behind the lines in the greatest drama of all time. But the emotion which lay behind these words burned in the girl's eyes and showed itself in the little tremble of the fingers which held her manly cigarette holder.

Nina Hopper, herself safely married and happy, made two or three quick steps forward and put her arms round her school friend who, only the other day, as it seemed, had been playing at life in the long, airy dormitory in which so many of their mutual confidences had been whispered after lights out. They were women now, both of them, one by the responsibilities of marriage, the other by the experiences of war work. It was a curious moment for them both, a silent eloquent moment full of affection and hopefulness and deep sympathy—a charming moment in which two utterly modern girls behaved as their grandmothers would have done under similar circumstances.

CHAPTER VII.

Two or three weeks after the reconciliation of Julian and Daisy Osborne, Elsa, now thoroughly American, brought Nina Hopper to the Castle for lunch. In the very becoming uniform of the American Red Cross Mrs. Mahan had just returned from New York where, together with many splendid women who continued to carry on after the hysteria of patriotism had left the country, she had been devoting herself to the returning soldiers. The house was full of conflicting energies. Elsa, a member of the motor corps, had been granted several days' leave after a very hard winter and was eager to play tennis, hear all the local gossip, and see something of Gilbert Carlton, for whom she had long cherished a secret and whole-hearted love. Egg-Flip, whose Wednesday morning round had been ruined by the necessity of conducting several long distance telephone calls, was boyishly obsessed with a desire to get lunch over and drive around to the golf course to join his usual foursome. He came out of his den which more nearly resembled a corner of the Grand Central Railway station than anything else, carefully made up of old familiar haunts with health and gratitude, set out to find an architect with enough poetry in his soul to bring into existence a house of dreams. He had tasted of beauty and of music and of ancient things. In future he must have them in his daily life, to see, to touch and to own.

over it all hung an exquisite blue canopy unspotted by a cloud.

Mr. Mahan had dashed off to his game in the ubiquitous Ford which was used for station work, and Elsa's own car, painted a grim battleship gray, was resting in the garage. This it needed, and so the girls set off to walk to the Country club—a matter of a mile and a half along charming roads, treelined and dotted on either side with well-kept houses. Not much was said by either of them as they walked. Elsa, delighted to be once more in feminine clothes two summers behind the fashion plate.

The inevitable number of cars passed them, taking people to the club. In one they saw Margaret Meredith sitting with a girl whose face was with a very slight air of patronage.

"Hardly that, but sometimes, with luck, my cover designs are accepted by Vogue and some of the other magazines. I'm what is called an advertising artist. Did you ever see the drawing of a man and a girl sitting on a wall displaying a good deal of socks and stockings? To my intense joy it was hung in the national gallery of store windows. It was the best thing I ever did, and it paid my rent for exactly two months." She laughed as she gave this watercolor sketch of the sort of life that she was forced to lead. It might have been disingenuous, but it had the effect of making her listeners feel that she had no desire to sail under false colors or to set herself up as competing with those unlucky people who do not have to work for a living, and go about from place to place crying petulantly, "Horse, Horse, play with me."

It was obvious to Elsa that it gave a good deal of pleasure to Margaret Meredith to see that her protege was accepted at once, especially by that autocratic young person, Nina Hopper, who either liked at sight and was affable, or disliked equally quickly and froze stiff. There was nothing neutral about Nina. And just as Elsa was about to turn away and look for Gilbert, stirred by a great longing to see him once more, he came out of the locker room of the house and over the clean-shaven grass with a long, swinging stride.

The clubhouse, a thick set, impounding building on the edge of the course, wore a wide-awake appearance very different from that to which it had become accustomed during the war. Many cars were parked in a convenient place to its left, and others came up and moved away in quick succession. Servants in white duck darted here and there, alert and civil, and through the screened front door one caught a glimpse of a fine and spacious room, homelike and inviting. The wide veranda facing the first tee was alive with women in all the light colors of summer clothes. Some of them were playing bridge while others kept up a lively criticism of the men on the first tee. Several of the tennis courts to the left were in use, and the course itself was dotted with twosomes and foursomes.
